Soviet Indicates Interest in New U.S. Arms Plan

By Don Oberdorfer

WASHINGTON - A senior Soviet Embassy official has described the Reagan administra-tion's proposal for "umbrella talks" on arms control as unprece-dented in U.S.-Soviet relations. He said Moscow was awaiting further specifics before making a definitive response.

The diplomat said Wednesday that the Soviet side was attempting to learn at what level of government and in what city the proposed talks might be held, where the United States thought they might lead and what issues would be considered first.

The last point is of central importance to Moscow, which has given high priority to talks aimed at averting anti-satellite and space weapons while refusing to engage in negotiations on offensive nucle-

The Reagan administration, on the other hand, is eager to engage the Soviet Union on offensive stratesic arms but reluctant to negotiate about space weapons because of President Ronald Reagan's strong commitment to a space-based defense strategy.

The Soviet official spoke at a Soviet Embassy reception and asked that his name not be used. Ambassador Anatoli F. Dobrynin, host of the reception, said in a brief speech that "there should be and fruitful dialogue and cooperation mackintosh we can understand. based on mutual interest and re- This must be studied."

Responding to the remarks by the unidentified official, the White House said a "broad exchange" between Washington and Moscow would be useful."

He said there have been reports of a possible meeting in January in Moscow be-tween the U.S. secretary of state, George P. Shultz, and the Soviet foreign minister, Andrei A. Gromyko, but that none was scheduled

'at the moment.' Mr. Speakes said there was nothing surprising to the administration about the Soviet official's remarks and added that the comments show there "is a need to have discussions and we would welcome it.'

Mr. Speakes also said the possibility of appointing a special envoy, or "czar," to handle arms control issues for the administration was still a "live option." But he said that such a post had not been suggested to the Russians as part of the arms control talks.

A senior White House official last week listed six areas for discussion under umbrella talks: intercontinental ballistic missiles, medium-range missiles in Europe, weapons in space, chemical weapons, confidence-building measures and conventional forces in Europe.

He spoke of the proposed discussions as being "across the board" but did not say how they would

France, U.S. Colleges Plan Technology Tie

By Amiel Kornel tional Herald Tribune

PARIS - The French government, in a policy decision to seek American technological cooperation, is creating links with 17 U.S. universities.

Gaston Defferre, minister of state for planning, was to fly Fri-day to Pittsburgh for a final review of the agreements at Carnegie-Mellon University, which is leading the U.S. consortium.

The program was proposed Sept. 12 by Richard Cyert, president of Carnegie-Mellon, in a letter offering a "direct access of French firms" to the university's research in automated manufacturing, robotics, artificial intelligence and computer-based education. President François Mitterrand agreed to the proposal later that month.

Mitterrand, Qadhafi Hold Surprise Talks

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatch ELOUNDA, Crete — President François Mitterrand and Moamer Qadhafi, the Libyan leader, held talks Thursday amid reports that Libya had not honored a pledge to pull its forces out of Chad.

Prime Minister Andreas Papandreou of Greece arranged the previously unannounced face-to-face meetings on the Mediterranean is-land of Crete.

A 15-month military standoff between 3,500 French and 5,500 Libyan troops ended formally on Saturday when both countries an-nounced that they had completed a pullout of their forces from Chad. The withdrawal accord had been regotiated under Greek mediation.

But President Hissène Habré of Chad said in the Chadian capital of Idjamena on Wednesday that Libya had not implemented the troop withdrawal accord and that Libyan forces were still in the northern part of his country, particularly in the oasis town of Faya Largeau. On Tuesday, U.S. officials said that most of Libya's troops in the country were still there.

Mr. Papandreou said at the end of the one-day meeting in Crete: "They basically agreed that no sin-gle French or Libyan soldier will remain in Chad."

England, arguing that their time had not yet come. "I have become convinced that the argument for the ordination of women now tips the balance (avorably," he said. But, he added, "in my judgment, we would be unwise at this moment to call for legisla-

Those agreeing with Mr. Runcie made two key points. One was that the move contradicts what oppo-nents of women's ordination called the essential maleness of God. ### Envoy From U.S. Aquino Panel Accused Of Making a Weak Case government's ombudsman on Thursday accused the panel that implicated top military officers in the assassination of former Senator Benigno S. Aquino of making "deductions, speculations and conclusions" on evidence that it was not sure would hold up in court.

Bernardo Fernandez, the omnudsman, made the accusation at a press conference he called to answer assertions that he was trying to shift responsibility for the pretrial investigation onto the factfinding panel without studying the evidence himself.

"They merely gathered evidence without even considering whether it is admissible or whether it will stand up in court or not," Mr. Fer-nandez said, "and on the basis of this evidence made deductions and speculations and conclusions. And now, it is for us to determine whether these conclusions are really justified."

Mr. Fernandez was designated by President Ferdinand E. Marcos to determine if enough evidence exists to bring the armed forces chief, General Fabian C. Ver, and 25 others to trial. ROME (Reuters) — Italy and the Vatican signed a protocol Thursday to a church-state concordat that regulates the tax status of church bodies and will eliminate state subsidies on clerical salaries.

Under the protocol, signed by Prime Minister Bettino Crani and Cardinal Agostino Casaroli, the Vatican's secretary of state, individual churches will receive tax benefits only if they are open to the public. Institutions formed by the faithful will be eligible only if recognized by the Vatican

The protocol narrows Italy's means of identifying Roman Catholic institutions of "religion and worship," the category eligible for tax benefits under the concordat signed in February.

CAPE CANAVERAL, Florida (AP) — Discovery's astronauts said.

Forger of Hitler Diaries Is Released

HAMBURG (AP) - Kourad Knjan, who has confessed to forging the Hitler diaries and is being tried on fraud charges, was freed Thursday after 18 months in prison, court officials said. No bail was required.

Prosecutors immediately appealed the decision to release Mr. Kujan, 46, a dealer of Nazi regalia. A ruling on that appeal was expected within a few days, a court spokesman said.

Mr. Kujau had been in investigative custody since he surrendered to the authorities on May 14, 1983. He and a former Stern magazine reporter, Gerd Heidemann, who remained in custody, are accused of swindling the magazine out of 9.3 million Deutsche marks ($3.14 million) for the bogus journals. Stern published some excepts in 1983.

Argentine Military Tribunal Resigns

BUENOS AIRES (Combined Dispatches) — The nine-member Armed Forces Supreme Council, Argentina's highest military tribunal, resigned Wednesday, washing its hands of hundreds of human rights cases, including those against former top military men accused of the mass murder of thousands of Argentines.

The military judges had complained that the Argentine press was publishing negative articles in a campaign to discredit the court after it found the repression of leftists, in which about 9,000 people disappeared in the 1970s, "not objectionable." The judges asked the Defense Ministry

Human rights groups said the move showed the failure of President Raul Alfonsin's policy of allowing the military to conduct its own trials of officers accused of crimes carried out during eight years of military rule. On Thursday, Mr. Alfonsin's 11-month-old civilian government shrugged off the resignation of the tribunal. A spokesman for the president said the resignations would clear the way for Mr. Alfonsin to pick a new court for the human rights trials.

That effort, they said, began spontaneously on Nov. 6 with the disclosure that Soviet MiG jet lighters might be aboard a Soviet freighter headed toward Nicaragua.

Since then, despite the announcement last Friday that no high-performance planes appeared to be aboard the ship, the effort has gathered force. In the process, the officials said, information and news have been used as forms of leverage in an interagency struggle over the direction and tone of U.S. policy toward Nica-ragua during President Ronald Reagan's second

A Defease Department spokesman, Michael I Burch, said the accumulation of arms in Nicaragua exceeded any defensive needs. "We just don't feel that Nicaragna wants to be a eaceful neighbor," he said

On Sunday, Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger said, "It is apparent that Cuba is a big problem and a second Cuba would be twice that kind of problem."

The effort to focus attention on Nicaragua, according to administration officials, began inadvertently on Nov. 6 when a government official told a television reporter that a Soviet freighter nearing Nicaragna might be carrying advanced fighter aircraft.

MOSCOW - The Soviet Union said Thursday that Washington was creating "fabrica-tions" about Nicaragua as a pretext for interference in its internal affairs.

At a news conference, a spokesman for the Foreign Ministry declined to say how the Soviet Union would respond if the United States were to invade Nicaragua. He denied that the Soviet Union had sent high-performance jet warplanes to Nicaragna, but he declined to say what weap-

When interest faded Friday after officials said it was almost certain that no MiG fighters were aboard the ship, Defense Department and White House officials began talking about the threat posed by the overall accumulation of weapons in Nicaragua.

Mr. Lomeiko said the United States had engaged in a "frenzied campaign of threats" against Nicaragua in the past week and that these threats were being backed up by huge shows of military force, including troop deployments and violations of Nicaraguan waters and

The administration officials involved violated one of the government's most forcefully stated objectives - preserving the secrecy of intelligence information — in making their disclo-sures to news organizations, which protected their sources of information in return.

The immediate impact of the reports on administration policy toward Nicaragua was un-clear. Concerned about what they said was an reasing flow of offensive weapons to Nicaragua from the Soviet Union, officials at the Defense Department and CIA circulated proposals last week that the United States withdraw its ambassador to Nicaragua.

They also proposed using the U.S. Navy to block arms snipments at sea, increasing the size and frequency of military maneuvers in Central America and, if Congress is willing, resuming aid to Nicaraguan rebels.
Secretary of State George P. Shultz said Sunday he was unaware of any such plans and his sides suggested this week that there would be no shift in administration policy, which has mixed pressure on Nicaragua with diplomatic efforts to resolve differences between the two countries. No one in the government paid much attention to the intelligence information until several weeks ago when the Bakuriani rounded the tip of South America, steamed past Peru, which had been considered her probable destination, and headed toward the Nicaraguan port of Corinto.

The Salvadoran minister of the presidency, Julio Adolfo Rey Prendes, said that instead, the government would seek an "end of violence" in general, and specifically referred to a cessation of economic sabotage by rebel units.

Still, the Machel government believed that it was being judged mainly on the basis of a label.

"There has been a great misunderstanding about Mozambique in the West," said Aquino de Bragan-ca, director of the Center for African Studies in Maputo. "Socialism, or Marxism, has always been more a method than a philosophy here, and we have never been a client of the Soviet Union, China or any-

The evidence suggests that Mr. de Braganca is right. Mr. Machel has said that he would never give the Russians or anyone else bases in Mozambique, and Marxism is seldom even mentioned except in official speeches. After ending nearly 500 years of colonial rule with a guerrilla war, Mozambicans are more than attentive to the concepts of nonalignment and independence: they are obsessed by

At the time of independence, Mozambique had only a dozen university graduates, 81 black shopkeepers and an illiteracy rate of more than 90 percent. That lack of bined with government mismanagement, a recent series of floods and cyclones, a three-year drought that led to the death of 100,000 people in 1983, and a continuing war against anti-government guersasters of Africa.

Women line up before dawn hoping to find a few vegetables or a bowl of sugar. Rice is rationed; each family is allowed a kilogram (2.2 pounds) a month. The butcher shops and restaurants are closed; a large grocery store had nothing in it the other day but three coconnits. Foreign reserves have shrunk to $35 million, not enough to pay for one month's imports, and the local currency has become so worthless that generous visitors to Maputo tip in packs of cigarettes with Mozambique rapidly deteriorating, Mr. Machel took a remarkable gamble last March and signed a treaty of "nonaggression and good neighborliness" with South Africa, the economic giant on his southern frontier. If Pretoriation and does help and the gueral. can, and does, help end the guerni-la war in Mozambique, both countries see the possibility of wideranging economic cooperation that could promote South African prosperity and set Mozambique on the road to financial recovery.

"Just across the border, not even 50 miles from here, are huge tracts of land producing food, and this must have weighed heavily on President Machel's approach," said Colin Patterson, the South African trade commissioner in Maputo, who is an ambassador in all but

"The scope of cooperation between our countries could be enor-mous." he added. "It is not difficult to imagine the transfer of capital and technical assistance to Mozambione, and if we can open the doors across our borders, despite our ideological differences, the treaty is going to be a landmark in the development of southern Africa."

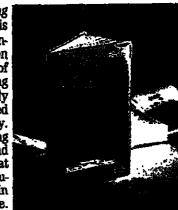

Soviet diplomats in Maputo, displeased with the treaty, have told Mozambican officials they have been tricked by the United States and that the accord is doomed to failure. Western political analysts note, however, that if the agree-ment works — and if negotiations are successful for an independent Namibia (South-West Africa) and a peaceful Angola - Moscow stands to lose considerable influence in southern Africa.

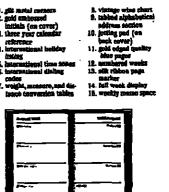

Those analysts point out, too, that the transformation Mozampreparedness for statehood, com- bique is undergoing has been repeated many times in Africa. ### Australian Liberals Open Campaign By Attacking Hawke Over Economy

SYDNEY — The opposition Liberal Party unveiled its election platform Thursday by warning that the recent economic recovery was based on luck and that the country was sitting on a "time bomb."

The Liberal leader, Andrew Peacock, said that the Labor Party government of Prime Minister Bob Hawke could not sustain the recovery and that wide-ranging economic reforms were needed. He also pledged to seek closer defense ties with the United States.

In a nationally televised address. Mr. Peacock said that with the recovery dependent on a lot of one-time factors and "with Labor having boosted government spending so dramatically this year, all Australians are sitting on a time bomb." The election is Dec. 1.

Mr. Hawke plediged Tuesday to maintain strong economic growth and to continue close ties with the United States.

Polls show the government with a strong lead over the Liberals and their opposition partners, the National Party. A poll released this week said the Labor Party was the choice of 53 percent of voters and the Liberals of 38 percent.

Mr. Peacock said a Liberal government would restore defense cuts introduced by Labor and give the Australian security, he said, depended on the Anzus alliance with the United States and New Zealand. He added that Australia would seek a new pact with the United States if New Zealand's ban on visits by U.S. nuclear-powered warships destroyed Anzus.

Mr. Peacock said the Hawke government had called an election halfway through its term because it was running out of ways to maintain the economy. He said its economic success was based on the recent end of a long drought and the recovery of the U.S. economy. ■ No Research on Space Arms

Mr. Hawke said Thursday that Australia was not now and never would be involved in research that could be applied to President Ronald Reagan's defense plans for space, United Press International reported from Sydney.

The important thing for the Australian community to know is that they have my unequivocal commitment that there will be no involvement of Australian research workers in this area beyond the conventional defense policy," Mr. Hawke said at a news conference, His comments followed a newspaper report Thursday that re-searchers at Australian National University and the Federal Department of Defense had been collabo-rating with the U.S. Defense De-partment since 1981 on helping to develop a "kinetic energy weapons

Sikh Sister-in-Law Will Challenge Gandhi in Parliamentary Election

By Sanjoy Hazarika New York Times Service

NEW DELHI - Maneka Gandhi, the estranged sister-in-law of Prime Minister Rajiv Gandhi and a bitter opponent of his mother. Indira, has announced that she plans to run against Mr. Gandhi in the general election next month.

She combined the announcement Wednesday with a series of stinging remarks about Mr. Gandhi and his ruling Congress (I) Par-ty, which she said "has thrived on broken promises, corruption and a debasement of all political values." Maneka Gandhi, who is a Sikh and president of the Rashtriya Sanjay Manch, an opposition group also known as the National Sanjay Forum, accused Congress (I) Party members of having organized the anti-Sikh riots in the Indian capital in which hundreds died after Indira Gandhi's assassination on Oct. 31. Aged 28, Maneka Gandhi is the widow of Sanjay Gandhi, the prime minister's younger brother. Until his death in a 1980 stunt plane crash, he was widely regarded as Indira Gandhi's heir apparent. Af-ter Sanjay Gandhi's death, Rajiv Gandhi was elected from his brother's parliamentary district at Amethi, about 300 miles (480 kilometers) south of New Delhi in eastern Uttar Pradesh, and took his brother's place as his mother's principal adviser and confidant. Maneka Gandhi was sent out of the prime minister's residence in 1982 by Indira Gandhi after she openly allied herself with rebels in Times. the governing party. Political commentators gave Maneka Gandhi little chance of winning against Mr.

Meanwhile, leaders of a group of India's major opposition parties, excluding Maneka Gandhi's group, met Wednesday and agreed to con-tinue talks on a possible election alliance. The participants called for "a sense of urgency and spirit of accommodation" among the opposition groups, known for their constant feuding and bickering, which has often cost them votes.

The parties involved include former Prime Minister Morarji R. Desai's Janata Party; the Lok Dal, or pro-peasant faction, led by former Prime Minister Charan Singh, and the Bharatiya Janata Party, a rightist Hindu nationalist group loyal to A.B. Vajpayee, a former foreign

At the same time, Prime Minister Gandhi, who also is the president of the Congress (I) Party, set his party machinery into operation, organizing state-level committees to draw up lists of candidates for the elections, which are scheduled for Dec. 24 and 27.

SIEMENS

An ongoing process: Siemens operating system BS 2000 is shaping the pattern of European computing.

The more widely distributed an operating system is, the more advantages it offers. This is common knowledge among computer users, and the reason is obvious: it is more worthwhile to generate software for an operating system with many users. And by the same token, a wide range of software gains more users for the operating system.

Freedom to grow

The Siemens operating system BS 2000, with currently over 2,600 installations throughout Europe, not only encourages such a development, but also guarantees any investment made in software products. When an enhancement of computer facilities, or simply an increase in computer power, is made, software investments are only safeguarded if the operating system remains the same. This is the point about BS 2000; it covers the full performance range of our state-of-the-art 7-500 series of generalpurpose computers, a total hardware program of 10 different models, from medium-sized machines for new installations to the very largest ever developed and produced in Europe.

Real efficiency

BS 2000 is also widespread because it is efficient. Diebold, the American statistical research organization, has determined that BS 2000 generates 40 percent lower operating expenses than other comparable operating systems, whether staff, system maintenance or training costs. Every 12 hours a new general-purpose computer is installed under BS 2000-Siemens' contribution to the future efficiency of European computing.

Other Opinion

The Reagan administration's post-election war of nerves against Nicaragua continues with ominous fervor. The campaign, inspired by a mistaken report about MiG deliveries, has made a virtue out of sloppy intelligence and a vice out of Nicaragua's alarmed response. It has involved the release of secret reconnaissance information whose disclosure is normally condemned as treason. And it plays crudely on American sensitivities about another superpower confrontation in the Caribbean.

The crated MiGs that "disappeared" from a Soviet dock in late September, it develops, were not shipped to Nicaragua. And the Soviet weapons that have been delivered are evidently no surprise or cause for special alarm.

Yet the MiG scare has provoked a barrage of threats that seem less addressed to Nicaraguans than aimed at whipping up a security scare among Americans. That would narrow the scope for diplomacy, and type as weaklings those in Congress and the State Department who prefer diplomacy to war.

These are grave conclusions from a stillsketchy record. But consider that record.

The affair began on Nov. 6 with the leaked news that the CIA had lost track of some crated MiGs last seen near a freighter that had now arrived in Nicaragua. This looked like a calculated effort to warn the Soviet Union and Nicaragua not to unload any advanced fighter planes. It brought prompt assurances from both nations that no MiGs had been shipped or ordered. Within 48 hours, U.S. intelligence had to be compromised a second time to confirm the accuracy of those denials.

That might have been the end of the affair except for some private reprimands of those who spoke too quickly and those who botched the reconnaissance to begin with. Most knowledgeable officials have since said that the leak came from a CIA or Pentagon official "who did not appreciate the potential impact." Secretary of State George Shultz, speaking "ad-

Instead of retreating in shame, as the Carter administration did from the erroneous report of a Soviet "brigade" in Cuba, Reagan aides have taken the offensive. MiGs or no MiGs, they say, Nicaragua is becoming a Soviet base, threatening its neighbors and U.S. security.

They have ostentatiously announced U.S. maneuvers. They have told a now-aroused press about proposals to call home the U.S. ambassador and to have the navy interdict Soviet weapons shipments. And they have said that if more serious weapons appear in Nicara-

Thus blindsided, Mr. Shultz can be forgiven for remarking, off in Brazil, that Nicaragua's "invasion concerns" seem to be "self-inflicted." With unintended irony he added. "Obviously, they are trying to whip up their population. Why then whip up the U.S. population? For leverage. As a Pentagon official said to Philip Taubman of The New York Times. "What we need to do is translate concern about the military buildup in Nicaragua into support for renewed aid to the rebels." A less hawkish official added: "Some of those who want us to adopt a harder line have long wished that MiGs would be delivered because they know that would tilt the policy in their direc-tion ... The next best thing to the delivery of MiGs was the possibility that they might arrive any day." In other words, if the truth is not disturbing enough, invent an alarming fantasy. ### No Role for Moderates in Pinochet's Chile

SANTIAGO — The long struggle by the democratic opposition to restore political freedom in Chile has now fallen victim to violent conflict between left-wing extremists and the repressive apparatus of President Augusto Pinochet's authoritarian regime.

General Pinochet imposed a state of siege on Nov. 6, again placing the country under military law, and hundreds of people were arrested after two terrorist attacks in which six policemen were killed. Extremists backed by the Communist Party and the Revolutionary Left Movement have thus succeeded in one of their goals — to force the regime into more repression, isolating the military from moderate opposition forces. "The way things are going now, there can be no dialogue on restoring an elected Congress and reducing Pinochet's term," said Patricio Aylwin, a former senator and a prominent figure in the Christian Democratic Party.

A violent national strike on Oct. 30, in which seven persons were killed, followed by extremist bombing attacks on police stations and vehicles provided General Pinochet with justification for clamping down again. The Reagan administra-tion has expressed its concern about the increasing violence and the indefinite postponement of restoration of the legal parties.

The regime's conflict with Roman Catholic bishops, who have urged respect for human rights, has been deepened by an order banning the return to Chile of the Reverend Ignacio Gutiérrez, who runs the Santiago archdiocese's legal aid office for victims of repression.

The reimposition of press censorship, wide-spread arrests without judicial orders, the elimination of habeas corpus, evidence that security and intelligence forces can operate with impunity —all this puts Chileans back in the dark night of official repression that lasted here from 1973, when the military overthrew leftist President Salvador Allende, to 1978, when the dreaded National Security Agency was reorganized to By Juan de Onis offset criticism of the human rights situation. In August 1983, after several days of "national protest" had led to peaceful demonstrations.

18,000 troops occupied Santiago and more than 40 people were killed. This led to left-wing extremist attacks that began with the bombing of electric power transformers and progressed recently to attacks on police.

Last year General Pinochet was willing to make gestures toward negotiations with the non-Marxist opposition, led by the Christian Demo-crats, Social Democrats and Radicals. He ap-pointed Sergio Onofre Jarpa, a conservative politician, as minister of the interior to conduct such talks. But they broke down over the government's refusal even to consider reducing General

The moderate opposition represents a clear majority of Chile's 11 million people.

Pinochet's exceptional powers.

Mr. Jarpa submitted his resignation on Nov. 5, in a general shakeup of the cabinet, but General Pinochet rejected the offer. Mr. Jarpa has been reconfirmed in his post after assailing Roman Catholic bishops for meeting with opposition exiles in Rome. On the eve of the Oct. 30 strike, General Pinochet sent police in massive raids on the capital's shantytowns, where the most violent protests have taken place in the past year. More than 400 people were arrested and more than 170 were sent to political prison camps.

Together with the newly declared state of siege and other repressive measures, including direct censorship of news on independent radio stations and in opposition weekly magazines, General Pinochet has all but ruled out negotiations with the non-Markist opposition. Yet in August 1983 Mr. Jarpa had been ready to meet non-Marxist opposition leaders.

Negotiations began then, mediated by Fran-cisco Fresno, Santiago's Roman Catholic archbishop, but broke down in less than two months when General Pinochet, violating a tacit agree ment, exiled several prominent union leaders and juiled some leaders of opposition parties identified with the days of protest.

General Pinochet has now slammed the door on renewal of the talks unless the opposition first announces that it accepts the present constitution, which provides for him to remain in office until 1989, with full emergency powers.

The talks main objectives had been to restore the legal political parties, formally banned since 1974, and to call an election for a Congress with power to reform the constitution. At present, legislative power in Chile is vested in a junta made up of the commanders of the army, navy, air force and national police.

General Fernando Matthei, the air force commander, caused a stir when he told an interviewer last month that the air force favored an understanding with the opposition, early congressional elections and possible reduction of General Pi-nochet's term. Two weeks later General Pinochet reacted, telling a meeting of the government-appointed mayors of Chile's 322 municipalities that he would not give up his powers. His renewed anti-Communist militancy is fed not only by his vision of a world heading toward East-West conflict but also by the fear generated in the military here by the Communist Party's "prolonged war" against the regime. The moderate opposition, which represents a clear majority of Chile's 11 million people, is forced into awkward positions by the polarization between the regime and the Marxist extremists.

Moscow 1984: Many Are Waiting for Gorbachov

PRINCETON, New Jersey - Frustrated by two decades of conservative rule, and by almost a decade of aged and infirm leadership at the top, the growing number of reform-minded Soviet officials are now, as reports from Moscow put it, "waiting for Gorbachov" — Mikhail Gorbachov, who at 53 is the current heir apparent to Konstantin Chernenko and 20 years his junior. Rarely, if ever, have reformers banked so squarely on one man in an awaited succession struggle. They do so out of two widely held convictions.

• Reformers believe that the only solution to the country's economic problems is fundamental change toward decentralized management, more incentives for industrial workers and a larger role for private enterprise and other market factors in agriculture and in consumer services.

 They are now convinced that such reforms are politically impossible until the reigning generation of leaders, enfeebled men in their 70s who began their careers under Stalin. are replaced by a vigorous post-Stalin generation that is less tied to the past, better educated and thus more com-

Equating generational change with policy change, reformers are counting on Mr. Gorbachov, even though the extent of his innovative views remains concealed behind the outward conformity of "collective" leadership. In various public and private ways, he has indicated a preference for several of their proposals.

According to reports, Mr. Gorba-chov has privately expressed interest in Lenin's "new economic policy, which marketized the entire Soviet economy of the 1920s. Changes of that kind, introduced in Eastern Europe since the 1950s and now under way on a large scale in China, are the real goal of many Soviet reformers. But it is Mr. Gorbachov's unusual political career that really captivates reformers. With degrees in law and agronomy he is, at least formally, the best educated member of the Soviet leadership since the 1920s. More important, his rapid rise has been spectacular in a system in which snail-like ascents through the bureaucracy are now the custom and able 60-yearolds languish in subordinate posts. Until 1978, when he was suddenly brought to Moscow to be a national secretary in charge of agriculture, Mr. Gorbachov was an obscure party even though responsibility for the chronically ill farm sector had been the ruin of other rising politicians. Mr. Andropov's death in February left a leadership composed almost equally of the Stalinist and post-Stalin generations. The emergence of the septuagenarian Chernenko clearly in-boss in his native province of Stavropol. Within two years he had become, at 49, the youngest full member of a Politburo whose median membership age was over 70. His range of toplevel duties continued to expand in the last years of Leonid Brezhnev and the short tenure of Yuri Andropov, making Mr. Gorbachov the secondranking member of the Secretariat. Full membership in both the Politbuto and the Secretariat has always been a prerequisite for becoming general secretary. Since only one other oligarch, 61-year-old Grigori Romanov, currently has that qualification, occupied that position. Brezhnev became Khrushchev's heir apparent, but he succeeded only because others had fallen by the way and because he supported Khrushchev's overthrow.

Mr. Gorbachov is already the target of rival pretenders and powerful groups with different policy interests.

His opponents managed, for example, to downplay his pivotal role at the Central Committee meeting that selected Mr. Chernenko. And he did not even address the Central Committee plenum on agriculture last

But the risks inherent in the posi-fared less well than have American vice presidents. Neither Stalin, Nikita Khrushchev nor Andropov ever month, which endorsed policies unlike his own. Anti-Gorbachov forces, it seems, are rallying behind Mr. Romanov, a more conventional, hardline politician with strong ties to the military industry lobby and who is widely disliked by reformers. Even if a reform-minded Gorbachov does one day emerge as general secretary, he will not automatically have the power to carry out meaningful economic changes against conservative opposition throughout the sys-tem. Unlike U.S. presidents, every general secretary has needed at least five years to consolidate power and build personal authority. And no Soviet leader since Stalin has been able to impose his personal policies on the Politburo, which has grown into an executive council representing a variety of vested interests, or on the administrative bureaucracy that must implement any policy changes. Nor will Mr. Gorbachov actually have the full support of his generation. Because of the extreme aging of the governing elite during Brezhnev's 18-year rule, generational conflict is playing a far greater tole in Soviet politics today than ever before. But there is no united political generation - in the Soviet Union or elsewhere. Generations may rise to power, but once there they are always divided by conflicting ambitions, values and perspectives on the status ouo.

The post-Stalin generations, which found a patron in the much older Andropov, will be no exception. A recent Western study found that Mr. Gorbachov's contemporaries at the level of provincial party secretaries, from whom will come the next ruling elite, are polarized with respect to existing policy - that is, between conservatives and reformers. None of this means that another era of reform from above, as occurred under Khrushchev, is impossible. What it means is that the solution does not lie in generation change alone, and that, like the chimerical savior in Beckett's "Waiting for Godot," Gorbachov may not come.

Watch Out For Jesse At the Helm

By James Reston

WASHINGTON — Consider the dilemma of Jesse Helms, the conservative Republican senator from North Carolina. Under the seniority rules of the Senate, which as-sume that if you are older you are wiser, he can choose to remain as chairman of the Agriculture Committee or switch to the chairmanship of the Foreign Relations Committee As chairman at Ag, he could keep his promise to defend his state's tobacco growers against the suspicion of his own Republican administration that tobacco is an evil weed that might be injurious to your health.

As chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, he would know in advance the president's foreign policy proposals and would thus be foreign policy and advance the president's foreign policy proposals and would thus be foreign about the president and the proposals and would thus be foreign policy. warned about any effort that Mr. Reagan might make toward a com-promise on trade or nuclear weapons with the Soviet "evil empire."

Jesse would be the helmsman either way. He could give up the chair-manship of Agriculture but still stay on that committee and ask to preside over a subcommittee on tobacco. Then he could move over to Foreign Relations with a new staff of experts and speech writers and have his say privately and publicly on the foreign policy of Mr. Reagan's second term. This is the sort of thing that gives

George Shultz fits in the night, but the decision is now in Jesse's hands. He is not deterred by the liberal tradi-tion of Frank Graham or Bill Friday at the University of North Carolina or Terry Sanford at Duke, or by the opinions of the newspapers along the Piedmont that are on to his tricks.

In fairness to Jesse, he never pre-tended to be anything but what he is: porter of the commercial interests of his state, anti-intellectual, violently anti-Communist and a brilliant praction are almost equal to its powers. Number-two Soviet leaders have titioner of all the negative rules and filibustering tactics of the Senate. These he used against many Reagan policies and appointments during President Reagan's first term, without pretense or apology. He op-posed and held up ambassadorial and cabinet appointments he didn't like. He intimidated Charles Percy, the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, and he defied the president and the secretary of state. He even managed to get 22 U.S. ambassadors to come out for his reelection, breaking the first rule of diplomatic courtesy. The president tolerated this affront with the lame excuse that his obedient ambassadors were merely exercising their First Amendment rights of free speech.

So in a way the joke is on an administration that vilified Jesse in private and defended him in public, and is now stuck with him for those famous "four more years."

Maybe Jesse will let them off the ook and keep his promise to defend the tobacco lobby at Agriculture, but nobody in the Senate counts much on his promises. He will do what is best for Jesse, and much will depend on what other senators do in the fight to replace Howard Baker of Tennessee as Republican leader of the Senate.

If Bob Dole of Kansas, Ted Stevens of Alaska, James McClure of Idaho, Pete Domenici of New Mexico or Richard Lugar of Indiana should make it - and the bets are on Senator Dole - Jesse might choose to switch to Foreign Relations.

But if Senator Lugar should lose and take over from Senator Helms at Agriculture, where he is not noted as a staunch defender of tobacco, the chances are that Jesse would not be amused and would stay where he is. President Reagan and Secretary Shultz would rather see Senator Lugar as chairman of Foreign Relations than Senator Helms or anybody else, but this is beyond their control and Jesse will have the last laugh.

The irony of all this is that, considering how the election turned out in Congress, the president is not likely to have his way on domestic economic policy and will have to turn to foreign policy as his main hope for success in his second term.

That means trying to get a compromise with the Russians on the control of nuclear weapons, some kind of reconciliation in the Middle East and cease-fire in Central America. And that in turn will take settlement of differences in the administration, a new consensus between it and Congress and a reappraisal of Mr. Rea-gan's policies with the Soviet Union. So the president and his aides hope that they won't have to face Jesse the Helmsman at the Foreign Relations Committee for four years.

1909: U.S. Sugar Fraud Is Alleged WASHINGTON — Disclosures of political scandals are threatened by the efforts now being made by the Government to investigate charges of fraud brought against the American Sugar and Refining Company, known as the Sugar Trust, as it controls the bulk of the refined sugar business of the country. It is alleged that, owing to collusion between Government officials and the trust, the Government has been defrauded out of duties on cargoes of imported raw sugar exceeding $30,000,000. It is asserted that for years high officials in Washington have known of these frauds, but that no attempt was made to suppress them or bring the perpetrators to justice. It is said that if the trust is destroyed, hitherto arched reputations will be blackened.

1934: Change Coming in Yugoslavia? SOFIA — A thorough change of regime in Yugoslavia is predicted by Bulgarian papers [on Nov. 15] on the strength of what is de-scribed as "reliable information" from Belgrade. Forty days after King Alexander's death, the papers say, the Regency Council will begin a series of reforms to lead the country back to the parliamentary form of government, as it existed before January 6. 1929, when King Alexander proclaimed a dictatorship. It is also reported that a new Yugoslav cabinet is to be formed in which Dr.

Machek, the Croatian leader, and other leading members of the opposition will be included. Over 200 Croatian politicians have made a petition to the Regents to grant political amnesty and re-establish a parliamentary régime.

Petrograd 1917: Some Awaited Wilson

N EW YORK — Through avoidable misjudgments, many of which are similar to current policies. the United States was an indirect partner in the Communists' ascent to power in Russia in 1917.

Conditions in the czarist empire; together with disenchantment at pro-longed involvement in World War I, provoked spontaneous mass out-bursts leading to the abdication of Nicholas II on March 15, 1917. Given the unresponsive nature of a system that had outlived its utility, this revolution was probably inevitable. The Bolsheviks did not play a major part in the czar's overthrow. Most of their leaders were in exile and returned only afterward.

A provisional government was eventually organized. Alexander Ke-rensky, a parliamentary Socialist, be-came its dominant figure and prime minister. He inherited a desperate situation — confusion on the battlefront against Germany, the Bolsheviks' rising challenge, an empty treasury. Yet the provisional government enjoyed initial popularity, largely be-cause of liberal reforms and of hopes that it could arrange a speedy peace with Germany. A European type of parliamentary democracy appeared to be Kerensky's eventual goal, and it seemed to be within his reach.

But the financial crisis escalated. To avert bankrupicy, the government sought assistance from allies -America, Britain, France, Italy. Woodrow Wilson sent a mission to assess conditions and discuss aid. Its members were unsuited to the task

The key personality and leader was an elderly former secretary of state, Elihu Root. A conservative Republican. Root undertook his assignment with reluctance, a patronizing attitude toward Russia and ignorance of changes taking place there. After the mission reached the capital, Petrograd (now Leningrad), Root talked extensively with the Kerensky administration but made no serious effort to contact non-establishment groups such as the Bolsheviks. After three weeks he was prepared to rec-ommend loans and credits. But there was one key condition: Russia must continue to fight Germany. Leaders of the provisional government argued that the existence of their regime depended on making peace. Root was adamant: No fight. no loan. Other allies backed him. To survive financially, the provisional government agreed. All told, American credits came to $325 million, of which $185 million was disbursed.

By Ralph Buultjens

Kerensky launched a new offensive against Germany in July. After mitial successes, Russian troops retreated in disarray. The domestic political consequences were instant. Confidence in the provisional gov-erament plunged. The Bolsheviks gained and became a major force. But the allies still urged war efforts and expressed alarm at increasing radical, anti-war influences. In August, the United States and its European friends decided to abandon the Russia of the March revolution. The liberal, parliamentary option was foreclosed. The allies expected power to pass to a strong, rightist military dictator who would prosecute the war and contain radicalism. This further weakening of the provisional government encouraged Lenin to press for a Bolshevik seizure of power. There were few left to resist. By early November the provisional state became the Soviet Union in a Bolshevik coup, now celebrated as the second (Communist) revolution of 1917. Thereafter Russia made its own peace with Germany.

There are lessons for American diplomacy in this episode. Obsolete regimes collapse of their own decay: The March 1917 revolution was unavoidable. But with a little understanding of local conditions and political culture, this revolution might have evolved into something other than a totalitarian state. Heavyhanded, excessively conditional diplomacy sought to squeeze local cir-cumstances to fit the big powers' global strategies. The result was disastrous. It weakened the democratic alternative and hastened, if not created the Communist revolution.

Expectations of rightist military deliverance were as useless then as they have since proved elsewhere. Is it too much to expect that remembrance of things past should enlight-en modern policy making?

Public protests in the Philippines over the Aquino assassination, supported by indignation around the world, provide a dramatic demonstration of the fallacy of the type of action apparent-ly recommended by the CIA.

Measures such as assassinations or the mining of harbors (as in Nicaragua) destroy the democracy that they are erroneously presumed to protect. Respect for justice and trust in gov-ernment suffer insidiousy but severely. Such measures are completely contrary to the fundamental principles upon which democracy is built The true strength of the United States rests on the grass-roots democracy of a people who can trust their government to support those principles.

Ultimately, neither communism nor right-wing dictatorship can stand up to popular aspiration for demo-cracy if it is sincerely and actively championed by the United States. Instead of terror tactics, America need only let its people carry demo-

In the Gulf, 1984 Is Year of Survival for Many Companies

By Robert Bailey

LONDON - For most contractors operating in Saudi Arabia and other Gulf states, 1984 has been a year of survival.

Awards of new work and payments for projects in hand have slowed, and for foreign compa there has been the added challenge of officially encouraged competition from local firms.

The next 18 months, however, will see publication of a number of new economic plans, and these, particularly Saudi Arabia's fourth fiveyear plan, will be important pointers as to whether hints of recovery in the last six months will lead to sustained new growth in the developing world's richest source of building contracts. The most disturbing aspect for foreign companies is the increasing pace of protectionism throughout the Gulf.

In 1983 Saudi Arabia's Council of Ministers approved a resolution declaring that "all non-Saudi contractors shall assign to Saudi contractors not less than 30 percent of the works provided for in their contracts."

Finance and Economy Ministry guidelines issued in August tightened the rule to encompass all joint ventures irrespective of the size of the Saudi holding company.

Previously the rule had been interpreted to mean that a company majority-owned by Saudis did not have to subcontract 30 percent of its work to wholly Saudi companies.

Local companies have also benefited from last year's rule opening state contracts to public bid-ding, thereby turning over an already declining market to a greater number of contractors, mainly Saudi. It is a move that has inevitably forced down airport for Eastern province, a 500-bed hospital at Hasa, also in Eastern province, for the National Guard, and a 160,000-barrel-a-day oil refinery near Buraydah. There are also renewed plans for a refinery of similar capacity at Shukaikh in Asir province and a lube-oil base stock plant at Yanbu. The main construction project for the oil industry concerns a $2-billion-plus plan to build a 500,000barrel-a-day pipeline through the kingdom for Iraq's State Organization for Oil Projects. A $510million contract to begin construction has been awarded to an Italian-French consortium.

In spite of local competition, therefore, foreign groups still have considerable work opportunities construction boom has abated, but the market is still one of the world's largest.

The ambitious projects of the last few years are being replaced by ventures of lesser scope, and more attention is being paid to maintaining construction that is already in place. This more modest approach to development has been a result of the oil glut and falling oil prices, as well as a rapid fulfillment of basic infrastructure needs during the boom years.

But the construction business in the Middle East remains active and analysis foresee opportunities for many years, particularly when conflicts such as the Iran-Iraq war and the strife in Lebanon end, opening the way for large-scale reconstruc-

One example of the fall-off in building has been in Saudi Arabia, where in 1983 the industry recorded its worst year since 1975. The value of Saudi Arabian contracts fell 59 percent from the previous year. And there was a fall of 40 percent in the first five months of this year from the corresponding period in 1983.

Despite the drop, Saudi Arabia still allocated $21 billion to construction in the fiscal year 1984-1985 and this figure is expected to rise to $24.31 billion in 1987-1988.

One of the consequences of belttightening in the area has been a tendency to turn increasingly to local contractors, to the detriment of foreign companies. The value of

While the Gulf countries still have healthy reserves, Libya has had trouble paying for an extensive road network through the desert because of falling oil revenue.

Egypt relies heavily on international aid for its projects. Lebanon, trying to embark on a reconstruction program despite continuing conflict, complains that aid money that has already been promised has not arrived while its economy has gone into severe recession.

Is your bank serving you straight?

AT Commercial Dalls of Factorial We go to great lengths to tailor T Commercial Bank of Kuwait our services to our customers' needs.

That is why we formed the Construction and Multinational Finance Department in 1982 specifically to serve the international construction industry. It has made a major contribution to customer service, both as a source of Letters of Guarantee and in providing information on such matters as Kuwaiti construction codes.

In fact, many international construction companies remain clients of the Bank after their project is completed. Especially when they want to undertake further work in the Gulf area.

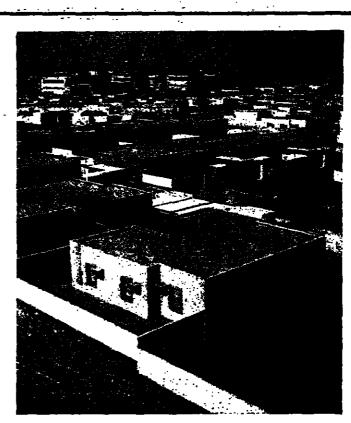

Commercial Bank of Kuwait is famous for pioneering new banking services. We were the first to introduce an automated system which turns round letters of credit in 24 hours. First to link all our branches by computer. First to establish a foreign exchange dealing room. First to offer our clients strong, reliable contacts in 89 countries worldwide. Now we have just opened our first overseas branch at 350 Park Avenue, New York. The list goes on. And already major companies in Japan, America and Europe - as well as the Middle and Far East - have taken advantage of our quite exceptional range of banking services.

They see it as the simplest way to win game, set and match.

Now Egypt's sights are set on much less glamorous objectives be-cause of bad roads, a desperate housing shortage, inadequate water supply and bursting sewers.

The infrastructure problem came to a head early in 1983 when a main sewer burst in the Giza governor-ate, on the western bank of the Nile, just across from central Cairo. President Hosni Mubarak toured the area and ordered his mediate steps to repair the damage. which was posing a major health

Hand in hand with the sewer renovation projects is work on re-building the water supply system to meet the city's needs. Similar projects are under way in the Mediterranean port of Alexandria.

The problems in Cairo, the most glaring in Egypt, stem from several factors. The greatest is the fast-growing population. Egypt, with about 47 million people now, has a staggeringly high annual growth rate, 2.7 percent, meaning that its population rises by one million ev-the revolution. Egypt's economic priority was mainly to supply the military for the fight against Israel and to fund social and health programs for the poor. Infrastructure in the major cities, while under increasing strain, was ignored. After the October 1973 Middle East war, Egypt had to reconstruct its battered Suez Canal cities. At the same time, the country's tourist industry and commerce with the West started to open up.

One result was the building of skyscraper blocks in Cairo for offices, apartments and luxury hotels. Greater Cairo now has three Sheratons and two Hiltons as well as many other hotels managed by big international chains. For the last two years, however,

Western estimates put the number of low-cost housing units that Egypt should build annually at 200,000. But only 80,000 a year are being put up.

Valentine (Nicholas)

One review of the show was headlined,

The building metaphor is apt: Horst constructed his pictures, figuratively and literally. "I still build my sets, mostly with boxes now, because the rest is so expensive."

When he began, he overloaded his pictures with background. "I was continually dismantling palaces, hauling in small forests and hothouses." By 1939, he noticed that his sets had come to resemble bomb shelters. "Again and again as I photographed that opulent, nostalgic collection of 1939, I heard it said that this was fashion that could only be created by a Paris on the verge of war." But before the war, there were the costumed balls of Etienne de Beaumont, where the cream of the aristocracy and the arts mingled, and fashionable dinners after which the ladies excused themselves briefly and returned, their lovely nostrils ringed

There was Marie-Laure de Noailles, de-scendant of Petrarch's Laura and the Mar-quis de Sade, Daisy Fellowes, Louie Macy, Jean Coctean, Lady Mendl and Cecil Beaton, bitchy about Horst's work ("I used to say, 'Cecil, I wish you would say in public what you say about my work in private'") even though Horst kindly photographed him looking like Garbo in "Queen Christina." Horst was an outsider and not everyone was kind. For his first society portrait, of Princess Marthe Bibesco, he built a huge Cezanne bouquet as a background. "Take that away," were her first words. "I learned," says Horst. He put in white flowers instead

He was as watchful as an orchin with his nose pressed against a window and he fantasized about the haut monde. "I imagined that wonderful world that people lived in," he says. "It's all a dream, isn't it?"

As a result, many of his portraits are shamelessly romantic and nostalgic now with their feathers and arabesques and flattering lighting. He invented new lighting for Marlene Dietrich, who arrived at the studio in a terrible hat, demanding the von Stern-berg lighting with its hollow cheeks and shadow under the nose. "She was about 50. I tried a soft light from the side, which took away the lines. Later, she had someone call from California to get the details - how many amps and everything."

He was more sardonic about Joan Crawford, who arrived in his studio in 1938 in an enormous hat, trying to erase her shopgirl image. "You can't do anything with this type of girl — no contact at all. The face is very strong and all makeup - a mask, not a face. She wanted me to imitate von Sternberg's lighting of Dietrich — accentuating the arched eyehrows, the half-closed eyes, the cheeks pulled in, the hard mouth." The background was a blowup of an Italian palazzo.

Among his tenderest photographs are only two guests to wear black (Horst came as a Hungarian hussar, Chanel in a funeral dress). They became fast friends despite Horst's friendship with Elsa Schiaparelli, Chanel's great rival, whom she always called "l'Italienne," pretending to have forgotten her name. Horst and Chanel clearly saw in each other hard-working peasant souls; there was admiration and complicity.

F Horst is associated with glamorous people and houses, he has also photo-graphed politicians and the first ladies of the United States, starting with Bess Truman and, recently, Supreme Court Justice Sandra Day O'Connor ("a marvelous wom-an, she couldn't care less if she looked glamorous or not"). Long ago, he photographed Gertrude Stein. "This is," said Janet Flan-ner, "the most beautiful photograph of any man I have ever seen."

Horst loved France and detested England on the grounds that a country where women wore wristwatches with evening dress was intolerable. As a GI in World War II, he came to like America, after a bad start in Fort Belvoir, Virginia, where "I ordered a glass of Dubonnet, my dear." He became an American citizen and, under the delusion that it sounded very American, changed his name to Horst P. Horst.

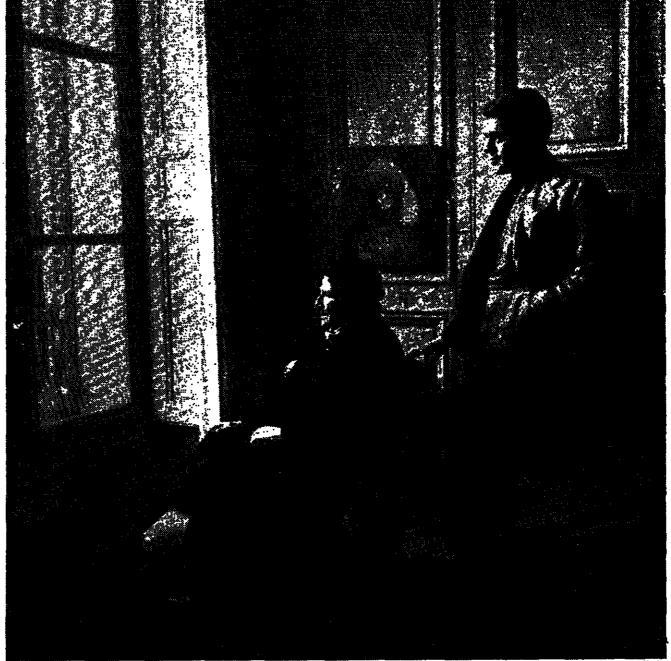

He is called simply Horst. "The shorter the better. Irving Penn always signs just Penn. Erwin Blumenfeld, a very good pho-tographer, always said he wouldn't get anywhere because his name was too long."

Before the war there were hardly any pro fessional models and Horst became used to stiff society girls and adept at removing inches of hipline by placing subjects between pillars or behind bouquets. In the New York of the 1950s, there were not only American dress designers for the first time, there were also superb fashion models such as the vivacious Suzy Parker, who later failed in films ("I always said to her. 'If only you'd stood as still for me as you did in your films' ").

There was also advertising work, and Horst worked as hard on making leg waxes and Soft-Weve toilet paper attractive as in laying a parquet floor for the Duchess of Windsor's portrait.

The recent show gave an idea of Horst's workmanlike approach, displaying some of his famous plaster props from the past as well as his "Modess because . . ." pictures. In time, it went right up to an ad for Calvin Klein socks, but the most striking fashion picture was a 1936 Robert Piguet dress: "I accentuated the important part of the dress and chose not to show the whole thing, Horst says.

Even now, Horst will occasionally put a face in shadow, a forbidden act in his early "For Horst, Artifice Was Everything." "Call those of one of the foughest women of all days, when tashion photography was dictat- become a tashion way, black was thought too hard to photo-graph and was always sketched.

The old-time Vogue studios had heavy floodlighting and photographers were obliged to use slow 8 x 10 cameras so cumbrous it was supposed that no woman could ed by strict laws. When Horst began, Conde not allowed to use a Rolleiflex until after the war. By then he had met Henri Cartier-Nast publications was spending only 540,000 a year on photography and $100,000 a year on photography and $100,000 a graphic on fashion drawings. Until Horst found a leica, though he does not think Cartier a Leica, though he does not think Cartier a leica, though he does not think Cartier a leica, though he does not think Cartier a leica, though he does not think Cartier a leica, though he does not think Cartier a leica, though he does not think Cartier a leica, though he does not have a lei Bresson would have been a good fashion

It's an Uphill Climb to a Swiss Passport

by Calla Jones Corner

ENEVA — Bells were ringing for Vit Stupka. But there was no cause for celebration. Stupka, a Czech refugee who had applied for Swiss citizenship, was turned down by his fellow townsmen for having testified on behalf of three other residents of Adligenswil, near Lucerne, against a local farmer whose cowbells were keeping them awake.

Swiss authorities might very well have approved Stupka's application last year -Switzerland has for centuries welcomed refugees. But complaining about cowbells showed that Stupka was simply not ready to become Swiss. Stupka's application was turned down at the second level of his application for Swiss citizenship. The procedure begins with federal authorities and continues at the commune where one has asked to be accepted. The application is finally approved by the canton in which that commune is located. Stupka may apply again, but his chances are

His case, although atypical, illustrates the rus case, atmough atypical, mustrates the rocky path to Swiss citizenship.

"It's like trying to climb the Matterborn in sneakers," says Olaf Nelson, a Swede who recently got his red-and-white passport. "It can be done, but it's not a sure bet you'll make it to the top."

how many people who apply for Swiss citizenship each year fail the test. But in 1982, 6,161 foreign Swiss residents became Swiss. There were 1,601 Germans, 401 French, 1,500 Italians, 299 Spaniards, 380 Austrians and 2.080 Czechs.

who apply were amusingly documented in the 1979 hit at Swiss box offices, "The Swissmakers," which was made by a team of unknown Zurich filmmakers. With a touch of artistic license, it traced the efforts of three aspirants to Swiss nationality: an Italjan worker and his family, a wealthy German doctor and a Czech refugee ballet dancer whose mother was Swiss. (The law was changed this year to allow Swiss women to pass nationality to husbands and children.)

she invites the police inspector to dinner, thereby calling into question her ability to assimilate to the Swiss way of life. The ballet dancer is looked upon suspiciously by her The federal government in Bern won't say neighbors because her gray garbage bags don't match the brown ones they leave on the sidewalk twice weekly. The Italian worker's apartment is invaded, during a meal of spaghetti, by the inspector, who has been working around the clock even at soccer games, to find something to enter in his little The intricacies and pitfalls awaiting those

After 12 years on Swiss soil, a resident in Switzerland can write to the Justice Department in Bern and ask for the procedure for Swiss citizenship to begin. While they have lived in Switzerland, foreigners have a file that is kept up-to-date on credit-rating, lawbreaking, parking fines and even movement in and out of the country. If an aspirant's file is clean, discreet inquiries are made about his or her habits. Those who have gone through the process say a surprise visit by the authorities to one's home is likely. They recommend that for the two or three years of the citizenship process The doctor's wife ruins the fondue when aspirants stick to Swiss dishes at mealtimes and dust their shelves daily. Olaf Nelson's wife recounts that the inspector not only arrived at the door at noon sharp, when the majority of Swiss sit down to their main meal, but that he put on a white glove, ran a finger over the bookcase and then opened her dishcupboard to see if her kitchen was in order.

One German was asked during an unannounced visit what social circle he belonged to. He warily replied that he didn't have a particular group of friends. In that case, the inspector advised him, he should join the local band. For those who have passed muster in the federal eye, the commune tests general knowledge of Swiss history and geography. Horst Schneeble, an Austrian who has lived in Geneva for 14 years and recently received Swiss nationality, says he would have been lost without his childrens' school books.

They asked me questions about history and geography that even a Ph.D. in the subjects or a good hiker wouldn't have known without a solid year of cramming," he Schneeble applied for Swiss citizenship for his children, who were born in Switzerland and will probably never live in Austria or in Spain, where his wife comes from. He adds that once he had passed the preliminary tests, he found that the Swiss were sympatheric and seemed to do all they could to facilitate the procedure.

"It's important to be on their wavelength," he says, explaining that his answer to why he chose his commune probably fixed it for him. "I told them that it was one of the cheapest I could find. Being Swiss, they appreciated the fact that I knew the value of

Recently, the exams have been rewritten to include less scholastic questions, and often the educational level of the aspirant is taken into consideration.

"We can't very well ask an Italian worker who has had six years of schooling the dates of the Swiss Reformation," says a spokes-man from the Justice Department. But Schneeble says that at the cantonal level he was asked very difficult questions on the Swiss economy because he was expected, as a

In any case, anyone hoping to pass the preliminary test and to avoid starting again from zero should know the birthday of General Henri Guisan, the national hero who commanded the Swiss Army during World War II: the names of Switzerland's most important mountains, not just the Matterhorn, Eiger, Monch and Jungfran; the ingredients for a fondue; and where and when Switzerland's forefathers founded the Confederation.

It goes without saying that fluency in one of Switzerland's four national languages is essential, preferably the language of the commune where one is asking for citizenship. In addition, although it is not necessary to invite the police for a fondue, it is a good idea to have made one's mark with the locals over several glasses of wine or beer, where the Swiss can judge if the aspirant really understands the Swiss way of doing things. Fatah Kamal, a 45-year-old Afghan, final-ly received his Swiss passport after completing two years of tests and taking allegiance to the Confederation. He decided to put his new nationality to the test.

"I received my passport one Friday morning," recounts Kamal, "jumped on a lake steamer to cross over to France for lunch. By two o'clock in the afternoon I was back at my apartment just as the postman was leaving the mail. What do I find but an official letter from Bern advising me to report for military service in three weeks."

Kamal who had done military service in Afghanistan as a young man, had forgotten that all Swiss men, native-born or naturalized, are obliged to serve three weeks a year in the Swiss army until age 55.

EITHER the obligation to do Swiss military service nor the often befty cost of a Swiss passport deters many from trying for Swiss citizenship. It can cost anywhere from 200 to tens of thousands of Swiss francs depending on one's financial position and the wealth of the commune in

James Kubic, a Czech refugee who got his Swiss passport in 1982 along with the other 2,080 Czechs who fled to Switzerland in 1968, puts it this way: "You can't put a value on freedom. Switzerland is often called a police state for its obsession with order, cleanliness and behavior. I can tell you, this isn't a police state. This is a democracy, perhaps the last true democracy. The indiidual's interests are put ahead of everything. I know, I've lived in a true police state. "If Swiss citizenship isn't easy to get and if the Swiss themselves appear xenophobic and insular, that's a good thing. This country works and it's the voting populace that makes it work."

Robert Cameron, who now wishes he had that vote, agrees. After 16 years of residence in Switzerland, Cameron, a British citizen, has moved to Belgium to a better job.

Cameron admits he feels more Swiss now than British. He says that in addition to the roots he's put down in Swiss soil, he's also leaving the most orderly, efficient and financially and politically stable country in En-rope, if not the world.

Switzerland is an oasis and will continue to be and the Swiss passport is in many ways a passpost to paradise," adds Cameron.

A Humorous Twist To the Training Film

by Elaine Davenport

■ ONDON — Some of the country's best actors, writers and directors have combined to pump respectability into the British film industry's traditional poor relation — the training film.

With a few notable exceptions, training films for both workers and managers here have been endured, not watched. They were boring to sit through and an embarrassment to produce. That is, until 1972, when four men formed Video Arts and began to inject a little professionalism and comedy into the The company's films are now used by 26,000 British organizations, exported to 60 countries, and have won 120 national and international prizes, including the 1982 Queen's Award for Export. The company's annual turnover is £4 million.

John Cleese, the British comedy actor best known as one of the Monty Python group, was a founder, and other names in British comedy, Penelope Keith, Andrew Sachs, Tim Brooke-Taylor, Rowan Atkinson, June Whitfield, Bill Maynard, Una Stubbs, Bernard Cribbins and Dinsdale Landen, regularly take leading roles.

One recent film was written by Antony
Jay, also a founder of Video Arts, but better known as the co-author of the popular televi-sion series, "Yes. Minister." The 25-minute. £50,000 ($62,500) training film was directed by Charles Crichton, who directed Ealing Studios' "The Lavender Hill Mob" in 1951.

"The reason we've used good actors and writers is because they're good, not because they're famous," says Peter Robinson, cofounder of Video Arts. "Good people get it right the first time. You pay them more but you get quality and you get it quicker."

7 IDEO Arts has taken the lion's share of the training-film market in Britain with the comedy documentary. The comedy only works if there's a credible base to the film," says Robinson. "All the detail has to be correct because you're making films for salesmen and managers. They will not notice if the detail is right, but if the detail is wrong, they begin to suspect the whole thing."

Robinson and his co-directors, with the exception of Cleese, came from a documentary background, news and current-affairs television. The first step with any project is gathering the facts on the subject. To help out, Video Arts often brings in a well-known company to pay part of the budget. One insurance group, for example, recently lent its name and expertise to a film on safety called "Oh. What the Hell."

So far, the only country to have reacted negatively to the comic element in the films is West Germany. "I think the comedy thing may be a bit peculiarly British," admits Rob-inson. "But Germans do take work very seriously and don't realize we're not making fun of work or business or management; we're making fun of the things people do

For example, in the safety film, "Oh, What the Hell," a devil, played by Rowan Atkinson, gleefully finds workers falling for the traps that can bring danger: complacency, hurry, distraction and unfamiliarity.

Video Arts' most popular films worldwide are on sales ("So You Want to Be a Success at Selling) and management ("The Unorganized Manager"). Also popular are a film on the appraisal interview, "How Am I Doing?" and a film for financial managers called The Balance Sheet Barrier.'

One of the oldest is "Meetings, Bloody Meetings," which, says Robinson, met with a cry from the heart among people who agreed that most meetings are a waste of time and wanted to know how to improve them.

As its business spread overseas, (Video Arts' best customer abroad is Australia) the company began to take its foreign customers into account. "We don't try to make mid-Atlantic films," says Robinson. "But we do get comments from the U.S., for one." American customers have complained about women occupying only menial positions in the films, about one film called "Manhunt" and about the lack of different ethnic groups represented. "If anything will date the films, it will be that," says Robinson. "Our latest films also try to cope with making sure minorities are represented. The main market, bowever, is still Britain. "We've got to make the films based on what we find funny and what we find memorable," says Robinson. "Trying to please too many people causes problems." Selling is done on the telephone. Customers can rent or buy the training films on 16mm film or video cassette. A typical purchase price for a 30-minute film is £550, with the rental at £85 for two days and £110 for a "In the early days," says Robinson, "more rented before purchase. As people got to know us better, the product became a known quantity and many more now buy outright."

There is also an option to convert a rental

LTHOUGH business is good, nonpay-A ing viewers of the company's training films are an increasing problem. Just over a year ago eight companies started the Training Film and Video Association, whose main aim is to fight piracy. The association has offered a £1,000 reward for information leading to successful prosecution of video pirates, and it is actively pursuing test cases for their publicity value. They estimate that up to £500,000 may be lost each year in Britain through illegal showings.

The piracy reflects the increasing importance and profitability of the training film: in the United States as well as in Britain, it is beginning to be taken seriously.

"Actors like working with good scripts and good people," says Robinson. "I also think word got around that our films were fun. Nowadays, we even get little requests through the grapevine that such and such an actress or writer is longing to do a film for us. It's very flattering."

Britain's Foodies — Beyond the Stodge

by Nancy Jenkins

ONDON -Some of the great chefs of Europe, including Fredy Girardet, Pierre Troisgros and Louis Outhier, were here recently. Also on hand were some but not all of London's leading food writers, restaurant critics and cooking teachers, as well as a couple of Oxford dons and a reporter for The South China Morning Post.

The occasion was a banquet in the mirrored Terrace dining room of the Dorchester Hotel, held to celebrate the publication of "The Official Foodie Handbook" by Ann Barr and Paul Levy (Ebury Press, London). "A foodie," according to this doctrine, "is a person who is very, very interested in food."

Damned in some quarters and praised in others, the handbook's arrival is but one more piece of evidence that the British, who for decades have nourished and been nourished by a national reputation for culinary stoicism, are discovering that food can be fun. They are also learning that British food does not have to be, and for centuries was not, unremitting stodge.

Quality restaurants are proliferating and the foods of the Empire, especially the cuisines of India and the Far East, are adding a great deal of zest to dining out. At the same time cooking at home has become more interesting with increases in the availability of fine, fresh products from all over the world.

The number of food-oriented publications is also growing. After years of relegating food to a few paragraphs in obscure corners, The Guardian newspaper recently initiated a food and wine page. In October, A la Carte, a British equivalent of Gourmet magazine. made its first appearance.

S if to confirm the interest, along comes "The Official Foodie's Handbook," a basic guide to some of the more esoteric aspects of the phenomenon by two writers whose backgrounds lend them a certain credibility. Barr is an editor of the glossy British monthly Harper's & Queen and co-author of the best-selling "Sloane Ranger Handbook," Sloane Rangers being something of a British equivalent of preppies. She appeared at the dinner wearing an elaborately sequined jacket by Thea Porter with a pink lobster down one arm, a large carrot down the other and a plump, silvery fish

Levy, who appeared in black tie and beard, is an American and the author of a scholarly study of the British philosopher G.E. Moore. He is also food and wine editor of the London Sunday newspaper The Observer and a self-proclaimed authority on the phenomenon he and Barr have dubbed foodie-ism.

In 144 pages of outrageous and sometimes uproarious detail, the authors describe the habits and habitats of foodles in Britain and on the Continent and in the United States, Australia, China and Japan. They analyze foodie bores, among them coffee, oil, fungi and what the British call offal, and foodie cliches such as "I read cookery books like novels."

They chart the history of foodie-ism, from the 1950 publication of Elizabeth David's "Mediterranean Food" through the 1980s when, ccording to the writers, New York and Paris went "food mad." Along the way they have managed to brush up against, if not knock over, several sacred cows. They have also set up a few of their own, the most sacred and unsurprising of which appears to be the haute cuisine of France. Of "the 18 best restaurants in the world" listed in the handbook, 12 are in France, 3 are French restaurants in other countries and the 3 remaining are in Japan and China. So much

The authors have also managed both to amuse and to outrage friend and enemy alike. Though "trivial" is the adjective most often used to put down the book, there are those who take it all quite seriously. The unapproachable Elizabeth David, who is credited by writers on both sides of the Atlantic with inspiring the postwar focus on food, is said to be profoundly distressed. Arabella Boxer, the food writer for British Vogue, said she was depressed by the way in which "The Official Foodie Guide" appears to promote an elitist approach and, at once, to put it down.

F the concern with foodies and foodie-ism seems ho-hum to Americans, who have witnessed the obsession with food in their own country, the concern with eating well, as a British phenomenon, is in a happy state of adolescence.

As in United States, interest in food in Britain is closely related to the growth of an economic class with the time, money, interest and ergy to explore the world beyond home and office or factory. Wartime deprivation is commonly cited as the major reason for the awesomely poor standards of British cooking in the postwar years. It is also true that, by tradition, food has been one of the things proper Britons should not be concerned with. All that is changing in many parts of the society. Entrance into the European Community has brought variety and quality in fresh produce to British shops.

"Ten years ago," said Claire Clifton, an American food writer living in England, "all that was available at this time of the year was cauliflower, brussels sprouts and cabbage. There wasn't a green bean in sight." Now even supermarkets carry fresh produce from all over Europe, South and Central America, Africa, the Middle East and the

The British have also been encouraged to rediscover their national sources for fine produce, meat, fish and game, dairy products and, in the south, a small but fairly distinguished wine industry. Jane Grigson, food writer for The Observer, whose "Observer Guide to British Cookery" has just appeared, said, "There are lots of middle-class, educated English people with brains and energy who are producing good cheeses, sausages and hams, fresh fish and shellfish."

All is not entirely encouraging, Grigson said. "For an island surrounded by the sea, our fish range is still appalling. We get top-quality fish from all over the world at Bilingsgate Fish Market, butch never appears in the local fishmongers. I think it all goes to France." The British have also been encouraged to rediscover their national

Still, the foodie revolution seems to have taken hold. Even the. emphasis on French cuisine is seen as a positive influence. "Cooking is an art," Grigson said, "and as such it demands a strong discipline."
That, she implied could only be achieved by applying oneself. initially at least, to French principles of haute cuisine.

Yet, when the parfait de foie de volaille was served at the banquet nbedded in glittering aspic and surrounded by little pink roses; artfully carved from tomato skins and an elaborate trailing garnish of parsley, Prue Leith, a leading cooking teacher and food anthority, was heard to murmur, "This is the sort of thing I've been struggling against all my professional life."

Toulouse is France's fourth largest city, with a population of 500,000. Sixty miles (400 kilometers) from the Spanish border, and fewer than 100 miles west of the Mediterranean, it is strongly southern in charac-ter, open and warm. But there is no southern Liveliness is a dominant trait of its people. Working watching or playing rugby, a local passion, or eating formidable platefuls of cassouler, they live energetically. They laugh easily and speak with the strong accent of southern France, pronouncing at least one common French word in a way that is distractively their own. If a Frenchman says "MEN-ti-nah" instead of "mant-NAW" for maintenant," it's a good bet he's from Tou-

They also appreciate their city. "I am a Toulousain and I adore Toulouse," says a taxi driver whose attitude is typical. "I have lived in other French cities like Bordeaux and Lyon and find them really sad compared to this one. Toulouse is much more animated. Even in appearance. After all, those other cities are gray instead of red." "Red brick walls and red tile roofs are everywhere in the heart of Toulouse, worked into striking fortress-like churches, elaborate towers, simple Romanesque arches, elegant Renaissance palaces, as well as the stately Capitole, now the city hall, and a multitude of ordinary buildings on ordinary, visually

The city is "pink at dawn, red at high noon and purple at sunset," says an old refrain, and anyone who has spent a sunny day wandering through it can affirm that if there is exaggeration in the claim, it is slight. Especially in the narrow, angling old streets just east of the Garonne River, the late afternoon can be a time of stirring radiance.

FORD over the Garonne, which originates in the high Spanish Pyrenees and reaches the Atlantic just north of Bordeaux, attracted the Celtic founders of the first known settlement here. Rome took over the town by the first century B.C., naming it Tolosa and developing a large urbanized area complete with a capitol and a forum. After the Visigoths overran Rome in A.D. 410, they captured Tolosa and made it the capital of a vast kingdom stretching over both sides of the Pyrenees.

From the 9th to 13th centuries, under the counts of Raymond, Toulouse was one of the most civilized of European cities, capital of the realm of Languedoc and renowned for its

In 1152, a distinctive feature of govern-ment was initiated: the election of a group of leading citizens to administer the city under the title of senhors de capitol, commonly known as capitouls. Usually governing 12 at a time, capitouls ruled Toulouse until the French Revolution. Since their privileges included the right to add towers to their homes, they left the skyline of the city, especially in the neighborhood surrounding the Capitole, punctuated with towers. Toulouse has never been bombed, and 40 towers re-

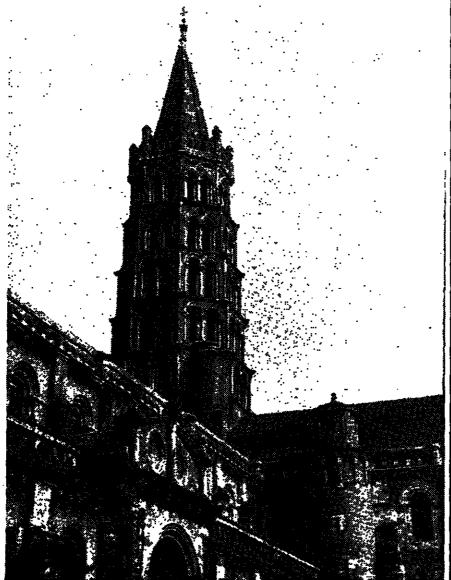

There were more days of glory in the 16th century, with the "pastel miracle." The little woad plant growing around Toulouse was found to produce a blue dye that won international favor - London and Antwerp were two of the biggest markets — and made quick fortunes for Toulouse traders. The trade collapsed in 1560 with the arrival in Europe of the cheaper and stronger blue dye called indigo from India, but not before Toulouse's merchants had built lovely palaces, usually of brick with stone adornment and often bearing highly original brick

- Toulouse is a fine city to walk in, even to get lost in, and the towers are one reason; you wander down a narrow lane and suddenly one of them shoots up before you. The terrain is flat, distances are short from one point of interest to the next, and the streets, some reserved for pedestrians, are animated.

Many streets have intriguing old names, like the Rue du Poids de l'Huile, literally, Street of the Weight of the Oil. Since Tou-louse has one of the largest university populations in the French provinces, boutiques and bookstores abound. There are pleasant parks and squares with fountains and flowers and benches; one of the nicest, just behind the Capitole, adjoins the Donjon du Capitole, which houses the Toulouse Tour-

The circular Place Wilson, a few blocks away, has many brasseries clustered around it; two popular ones are Le Capoul at 13 Place Wilson and Le Pyréneen at 14 Allées Franklin Roosevelt. Water brackets the entire old district, with, on the east, the Canal du Midi, and on the west, the Garonne and its bridges — the seven-arched brick and stone Pont Neuf is the oldest and most

C TENDHAL once said that Toulouse TENDHAL once said that Toulouse reminded him of Rome. On the walls of the Saile des Illustres of the Capitole are large paintings in which, in 1906, the artist Henri Martin portrayed the luminous Garonne, with Sunday strollers and solid.

St. Sernin Basilica, bell tower.

colorful buildings on its banks, looking for all the world like the Arno flowing through Pisa or Florence.

Architecturally notable buildings are numerous. The Eglise Notre-Dame du Taur. for example, a small church dating from the 14th and 15th centuries, was built on the spot where, in 250, St. Saturnin (also known as St. Sernin) was martyred by being tied to a bull (or taur in the Occitan language) and dragged to death. It has an extravagantly decorated brick bell tower that resembles a wall and is almost as wide as the church

A few blocks north of it is St. Sernin Basilica, where the saint was once buried. Built between the 11th and 14th centuries, it is of brick and stone with a five-story bell tower. The largest and most celebrated Romanesque church in southern France, it was famous in the Middle Ages for the relics it still houses, and as a stopping place for pilgrims on their way to Santiago de Compostela in northwestern Spain. The 14th-century Church of the Jacobins may be even more beautiful, a huge, fortress-like brick structure surrounded by buttresses. Its immense interior is separated into two naves by 70-foot (21-meter) pillars that irresistibly pull the eye up to the colorful tracery ribbing the vaults. The church's cloister is so peaceful that its existence in a bustling city seems a miracle, as does the former Augustinian monastery at 21 Rue de Metz, whose oldest parts also date from the 14th century. Now a museum, the Musée des Augustins, it displays splendid works of art, especially from the Middle Ages. Among its treasures are Romanesque capitals from the cloister of the church of La Daurade, the tomb of a knight from about 1290 and a Virgin and Child, known as Notre-Dame-de-Grace, sculptured in Toulouse in the mid-15th cen-

Other museums of special interest are the Musée du Vieux-Toulouse, 7 Rue du May, which focuses on the history of Toulouse and displays popular art of the region; the Musée Georges Labit, 43 Rue des Martyrs de la Libération, to which a traveling 19th-century businessman from Toulouse brought works from China, Japan and India, and the Musée St. Raymond on Place Saint-Sernin, which has one of the finest collections of Imperial Roman busts outside Italy.

Also worth visiting are St. Etienne Cathedral, massive on the outside and a hodgepodge of architectural styles on the inside, and two 16th-century pastel merchants' homes: the Hôtel de Bernuy and the Hôtel d'Assèzat, the tower of which is open to visitors seeking a view over the jumbled rooftops of the city.

n the distance, far from the center, are the large, modern buildings where re-search into space communications and aircraft construction is carried out. The aerospace industry was launched in Toulouse during World War I, moving from northern France. By World War II, Toulouse had become France's leading aircraft manufac-

Toulouse can serve as a base for excursions to other southern French towns of historic and artistic interest. Carcassonne, the walled medieval city, is 60 miles by route to the southeast, while Albi, the birthplace of Heari Toulouse-Lautrec, with a museum devoted to him and an imposing cathedral, is about 50 miles northeast of Toulouse.

La Ville Rose itself has much to offer besides sightseeing. One eats well in Toulouse; the food is generally considered to be among the best in France. Typical of the hearty cooking of the old agricultural region of Languedoc, cassoulet de Toulouse, which combines slowly cooked white beans with such meats as preserved goose, lamb, pork and, essential in this city, Toulouse sausages, is the first dish any French visitor would order here. As the late Waverley Root put it, the cuisine is "solid, like the strong Romanesque architecture of the south, never elaborate, like the flamboyant Gothic buildings of the north.' Foie gras, duck, lamb, goose, pâtés and, of course, cassoulet, retain pride of place on the city's menus, but grace notes have been added in the form of fresh vegetables frequently combined with small portions of meat to produce salads and light, inventive main

Toulouse has no wine of its own, but both Madiran, a heavy-bodied red from the Gascony region to the west, and Cahors, a darkcolored and pleasantly coarse red from the Quercy region to the north, are excellent . Two regional sparkling white wines are Gaillac, produced just west of Albi, and Blanquette de Limoux, from south of Car-cassonne. The classic way to finish a meal in Toulouse is with a small glass of Armagnac, the earthy and idiosyncratic brandy made mostly in the department of Gers, to the west of Toulouse.

Cultural activity and diversity are a source of pride. The Orchestre Nationale du Capitole de Toulouse is recognized as one of the best in France. Bel canto is another passion, and there are full seasons of opera, theater and ballet.

There is also the quiet, tree-shaded Canal du Midi to explore. Barges can be rented in Toulouse and Castelnaudary, 37 miles to the southeast, to cruise the 17th-century waterway all the way to the Mediterranean.

HE Grand Hôtel de l'Opéra, 1 Place du Capitole (tel: 21.82.66), new and tastefully decorated, offers deluce accommodations overlooking the Capitole. Rates for two in a room run from 350 to 900 francs (about $40 to $100). Two other large, modern hotels, almost as centrally situated, are the Frantel Wilson, 7 Rue Labéda (tel: 21.21.75), and the Mercure St. Georges on Rue St. Jerôme (tel: 23.11.77). Expect to pay around 400 francs for two at either.

An especially pleasant small hotel in central Toulouse is the Royal, 6 Rue Labéda (tel: 23.38.70), with friendly staff and a quiet inner courtyard; about 300 francs for two. In town, cassoulet, preserved goose and foic gras are easy to find, but the classic cassoulet restaurant is the rustic Le Colombier, 14 Rue Bayard (tel: 62.40.05); closed Saturday and Sunday and all of August; about 120 francs a person.

Les Frangins, 16 Rue Gambetta (tel: 23.20.11), is small and lively with specialties like duck or lamb; about 120 francs a person. At lunch (weekdays only) there are cheap and simple fixed-price menus. At the more elegant La Belle Epoque, 3 Rue Pargaminières (tel: 23.22.12), the chef, Pierre Roudgé, has had the bright idea startling, for Toulouse — of adding calonic counts to some of the items on the menu. There are numerous foie gras and duck spe-cialties, with calories unlisted, and a salad with warm pigeon and pleurote mushrooms. The restaurant is given one star in the Michelin guide; expect to spend about 200 francs a person. (Closed Sunday; lunch served on veekdays only.)

The Office de Tourisme de Toulouse stocked with information about local and regional activities, is in the Donjon du Capi-tole, 31000 Tonlouse; tel: 23,32.00.

On the Snow Slopes of China

by Christopher S. Wren

EUING — Imagine flying to a long-anticipated ski vacation in Colorado, only to be met at the airport by a local tourism official who says apologetically that skiing this winter is, well, inconvenient. Aspen, he tells you, is under repair, and while it is a pity you didn't ask to go to Vail instead, it, too, has closed. But don't worry, because a visit to the Denver stockyards has been planned.

That is what skiing in China is like. The good news is that there are no lift lines. The bad news is that there aren't many lifts, and those that exist seem to be a secret kept by the China International Travel Service, The travel service prefers to keep Western tourists tucked inside a tour bus where they won't fall and hurt themselves.

Yet logic dictates that China must have good skiing, since a third of the country is mountainous. China sent three dozen Alpine and Nordic skiers to the winter Olympics at Sarajevo. Its best downhill racer placed 29th, but he must have trained somewhere.

So, last winter, I set out with a colleague from Beijing in search of some rumored skiing in Manchuria, China's frigid northeast. My companion had brought only his boots to China, but I had two pair of skis, so we packed our warmest clothing and flew to the Manchurian city of Harbin.

ARLY one crisp morning, we caught the local train to Shangzhi, a rural county seat about 75 miles (120 kilometers) southeast of Harbin. When we got off the train at Shangzhi, the highest elevation in sight was the smokestack of a cement factory. Throngs of peasants in floppy fur caps and quilted jackets of heavy cotton gaped at our garish red parkas and the funny long boards with upturned tips.

But there was a ski area a dozen miles outside town, and after lunch we took a jolting half-hour ride past outlying villages. A sign welcomed us to the Wujimi ski area. which looked like a firebreak slashed down the highest hill

Our hosts explained apologetically that the lift wasn't working because its operator had been transferred to another job. Besides, one man volunteered, "The competitors usually prefer to walk up because it is quicker." I had brought a set of climbing skins, but it was easier to make the half-hour trek in ski boots while toting our skis. At first our hosts took turns trotting alongside us to make sure that we didn't get lost, didn't hurt ourselves, or perhaps stumble upon a missile site. Seen from the top, the hill looked entirely skiable. It was of intermediate standard, with a vertical drop of perhaps 600 feet (180 meters), and about a half-mile long, including the icy runoff at the bottom. Some young local skiers had finished a competition on the hill a few days earlier, leaving us a mostly packed slope. We logged several runs down the hill, starting in heavy powder and wind-

spartan rooms of the county's barracks-like guesthouse. The plumbing was somewhere down the unheated hall, and during our solitary supper, we warmed ourselves with a bottle of Gaoliang, the 110-proof Manchurian answer to vodka.

After a sound night's sleep — no raucous disco racket here — we headed back to Wujimi. Our minibus driver offered to try to work the lift, which was powered by an old truck engine. By our second run, he had it creaking away, having thawed the ice around by pouring boiling water over it.
The lift bumped along the ground. To ride you had to run along with it, carrying your skis in one hand and performing one-armed pull-ups with the other to avoid the boulders. Compared with such lively ascents, our six runs seemed dull. We concluded that Wujimi, for all its earnest hospitality, was not ready to become an international ski resort. What a pity we hadn't gone instead to Qingyun, we were told. It was the largest ski area in Heilongjiang Province, strictly international class, with runs two miles long. Of course, it shut down when the local athletes weren't training, and besides, someone reported, the rope tow was broken.

So we took the night train back to Harbin and, after a few hours' sleep, a train south to Jilin, where we had heard of a skiing area.

After Wujimi, Songhua Mountain seemed as lofty as the Alps. It was little more than 3,000 feet high. But its northern side offered a 2,200-foot vertical drop and a trail that forked into two for a run that totaled nearly two miles. There was even a real mile-long chairlift that rose for 18 minutes above the surrounding farmland and Songhua Lake.

Construction of the ski area began back in 1966, only to be halted during the Cultural Revolution. It finally opened 15 years later to a mixed clientele that included Chinese athletes, ski-starved Western expatriates from Beijing, and Hong Kong Chinese dis-covering what snow looked like.

We were billeted at a gloomy old hotel called the Xiguan in Jilin, a 40-minute drive away, and hired a car with a driver for the yuan equivalent about $14 to take us out to the Songhua ski area. We were joined on our excursion by a Mr. Zhou, a travel service guide with no interest in skiing himself. When we arrived at Songhua, its chairlift was already in motion.

My scarred old pair of K-2s might have drawn snickers at posher ski resorts, but here local Chinese and Hong Kong tourists clustered around to marvel that anyone would ride such streaks of red-white-and-blue. Skiing in China is nothing if not ego-boosting.

My companion decided to borrow skis from the small warming hut, which stocked about two dozen sets of mostly Japanese boots, skis and poles. The attendant tightened the bindings to his boots until the screws would budge no further. Once out-side, we discreetly loosened them until the safety releases worked.

Zhou announced that the cost of a day's skiing, which included the lift, skis and boots, would be the equivalent of $5 apiece, ing up on glare ice, before calling it an or double what the busload of Hong Kong ed to huddling under heavy quilts in the plained, was due to the fact that we were foreign friends from the West and not ethnic Chinese compatriots. My response — that an American ski resort engaging in that kind of discrimination would go bankrupt with lawsuits - sent him into giggles.

EFORE we were allowed on the mountain unattended, we had to be checked out by Sun Li, the local ski instructor, who led the way to the chairlift. Snow dusted the branches of the passing larch, oak, and poplar trees. Overhead, a couple of MiG lighters wheeled lazily in a brilliant blue sky.

Sun looked surprised when we followed her over the small headwall and down through some steep moguls without spilling. I in turn was impressed by her style. For years, ski instructors had shouted at me to put most of my weight on the downhill ski. But until now I had never seen anyone keep all of it there. Sun lifted her uphill ski a good six inches off the snow, then stamped it back down for the next turn in a graceful kind of clog dance.

The slope widened as we descended. Though it was not groomed, the skiing resembled the hard-packed conditions of New England. Rocks protruded from one lower trail so we took the other, exhibitrated to have the mountain to ourselves. We encountered traffic only at the bottom, where Hong Kong compatriots, on skis for the first time, sprawled in various stages of helplessness. After a couple of runs, Zhou stepped forward to declare that we should have lunch. After the hearty skiers' special - whole braised fish, fried spare ribs, eggs scrambled with vegetable greens, we returned to nearly empty slopes feeling bloated. We shared the mountain only with a Japanese skier and Xiao Wang, an engaging local Il-year-old. He tripped and somersaulted, and his borrowed skis kept slipping off, but by the end of our run I suspected he would olossom into a downhill racer. The next day, we found that a few obstacles had been added. The local peasants were using the trail to haul down brushwood they had gathered from the forests. Once off the lift, we confronted an annoved ox tied to a sled. By midmorning, the downhill run had become a challenging slalom course, and we had to pick our line carefully through the firewood, oxen, manure and peasants, a couple of whom blocked the trail by sprawling Zhou agreed later that China's ski facilities were largely undeveloped. This ex-plained why the travel service did not solicit foreign patronage.

It is only a matter of time before China realizes that there is gold, or at least hard currency, to be mined from the snow on all those hills. A French company has been negotiating to develop a major resort at Motianling, about 30 miles from Jilin. There are other plans to add a restaurant and hotel at Songhua Mountain. Once skiing is no longer considered odd, more Chinese skiers like Sun Li and Xiao Wang are bound to emerge. Until then, skiing in China will require a resourcefulness beyond the mastery of mere technique.

6 MONTHS 800% PROFITS

Whenever the DOW dips, there are sages who mistake a burp for a death rattle, warning timid souls to retreat from hope to await the Apocalypse, reading Thomas Hardy Instead of Penthouse. Most investors are unforreading Thomas Hardy instead of Penthouse. Most investors are unitortunately pre-conditioned to buy into strength and to sell into weakness, flouting rational behavior. A pundit recently remarked that the real (afterinflation) value of the DJI fell 62% between 1964 and 1983 and that this fell is symbolic of the Sunset of free enterprise.

The fallacy of his thesis is apparent; one need only remember Disraell's quip that there are "liars, dark statistics".

The greatest gains in equities between 1964 and 1983 were realized by "unlisted" shares or by stocks on the American Stock Exchange, not by

"unlisted" shares or by stocks on the American Stock Exchange, not by behemoths on the N.Y.S.E., for the latter offer only arithmetical gain.

Dozens of legendary "winners" were incubated outside the embrace of the DOW, companies ranging from APPLE to WANG.

How many pessimists recall, to cite one example, that WANG – which a prestigious investment firm once abbed "an absurd risk" – spiralled from presugious investment inm once dubbed fan abstird risk — spiralled inom 5/8 to a high of $42. In 1982, when the DOW was being pulverized (under 800), C.G.R. mused... "BUY AMERICA, FOR THE DOW WILL TOUCH 1,000 BEFORE HITTING 750". And now? Despite tremors, the DOW will escalate above 2,000 before the feared 1,000 plateau is breached; an upswing characterized by surges in secondary and developing equities.

Our forthcoming report reviews emerging corporations, analogous to prior "special situations" that dramatically outpaced the DOW, some vaulting 800% in less than six months. As a pièce de résistance, we focus upon "senior securities" that may be ingested by predators at premium prices.

New Exhaust Trap for Cars Cuts Diesel Smoke, Odor

By MARSHALL SCHUON

New York Times Service T EW YORK - Not so long ago, U.S. drivers were being told that diesel oil was the wave of the future; that the diesel automobile was the solution to low fuel economy and high prices at the pump. That forecast failed to come true for a number of reasons, but now technology has eliminated at least two of them: smoke and odor. There is a new device known as a trap oxidizer, and by using it in 1985 models. Mercedes-Benz has cut by two-thirds the smoke and odor of the turbocharged diesels it sells in 11 Western states. In addition, use of the trap means the cars can continue to be sold in California, whose diesel-emission standards for next year are twice as strict as those of the rest of the United States.

What we have in our oxidizer is

80,000 cars in the United States next year, and the trap oxidizer is particularly important to the West German company, since half of those sales will be diesels. Even that is a much smaller percentage than in the past, and Mercedes has a big cigarette filter in a can. changed its product mix to reflect sagging diesel sales that are the result of the stabilization of gasoline prices, the spotty availability of diesel fuel and the diesel engine's inherent noise, odor and smoke.

Methods for reducing the smell and soot have been studied for years, of course, and Mercedes is not alone in the research.

Volkswagen has been experimenting with oxidizers — but in combination with fuel additives, and the company says its vertical forms.

sion, which feeds tiny bits of magnesium additive into the diesel oil has reduced soot by 50 percent. According to Mercedes, however, the new trap oxidizer was sound to be best for its engines.

"What we have in our current oxidizer," said A.B. Shuman, a Mercedes spokesman, "is a big cigarette filter in a can. And its practical effect is virtual elimination of smoke and odor, even in hard acceleration."

HE oxidizer takes the form of a ceramic honeycomb, housed in a stainless steel casing mounted on the engine's exhaust manifold. The honeycomb is made up of rows of adjoining passages blocked at alternating ends, checkerboard

The exhaust gas entering any of the square passages cannot flow out without first passing through the porous walls into an adjoining passage open at the other end. The soot particles are trapped within the ceramic structure, and a special coating causes the trapped soot to be burned off, automatically cleaning the oxidizer as the car is driven.

To make sure that all this happens with the lowest possible drop in exhaust pressure, which is necessary for good performance, the ceramic trap must have a large filtering area, must be highly porous and must have sufficient mechanical and thermal

The answer, according to the engineers, was Cordierite, a ceramic substance manufactured by Corning. The catalytic coating, based on vanadium oxide, was added to help the filter burn away trapped soot.

The 3.5-pound (1.5-kilogram) canister is 6 inches (153 millimeters) long and 5.5 inches in diameter. It has a filtering surface of 1.659 square inches, with 100 filtering cells per square inch. The soot begins to burn off at a temperature of 680 degrees Fahrenheit (360 degrees centigrade), although the top end of the effec-

To achieve that, the filter was placed as close to the engine as possible, and modifications were made to raise the heat of the exhaust gases.

Currently, the unit is mounted between the exhaust manifold and the turbine section of the turbocharger, where engine heat is

Oil Prices Weaken Further

OPEC's Resolve Still in Doubt

By Bob Hagerty International Herald Tribune LONDON — The oil market showed signs of further weakening Thursday amid doubts about OPEC's resolve to hold down pro-

In Oslo, oil executives said that Norway is likely to offer a small cut of about 30 cents a barrel in its oil prices unless demand picks up in the next couple of weeks. In New York, Mobil Corp. said it reduced the price it is willing to pay for West Texas intermediate, the most closely watched grade of U.S. crude oil, to $28.75 a barrel from $29.25. The new Mobil price undercuts most other major U.S. oil companies, which have lowered their posted price for the crude to $29 during the past two weeks.

Speculation that other major oil companies would match Mobil's new posted price helped nudge down prices of crude-oil futures contracts on the New York Mercantile Exchange. Early in the af-ternoon, West Texas intermediate for January delivery was quoted at $28.19 a barrel, down from $28.27

After Norway cut its prices by about $1.35 in mid-October, prompting similar cuts by Britain and Nigeria, some Norwegian officials suggested that the country would be able to reverse the price cut in December. But the oil market has remained weak in the two weeks since the Organization of Pe-troleum Exporting Countries agreed to reduce its output ceiling to 16 million barrels a day from 17.5 million in an attempt to force

Emery's Freight Strategy Paying Off

Carrying 'All Things To All People' Abroad

By Thomas J. Lueck New York Times Service

WILTON, Connecticut - After years of taking a back seat to Federal Express Corp. in the over-night parcel delivery business, Enery Air Freight Corp. is growing apace by offering the longest list of services in the air-freight industry. Emery, long viewed as the most conservative of the air shippers, has been looking for special niches. Like Federal Express, Airborne Freight Corp. and others. Emery makes overnight deliveries of small, lightweight envelopes and parcels. But, using its huge, three-year-old sorting and distribution hub in Dayton, Ohio, Emery has also made itself No. 1 in air shipments of heavy cargo.

the United States of documents, packages and parcels, a business in which Emery sees enormous growth potential. They've been trying to be all things to all people, and it is paying off," said Alfred Norling, an analyst at kidder, Peabody & Co.

Emery's heavy-parcel business has been swelling because of the trend toward "just in time" inventory procedures by automakers and other major facturers. To cut financing costs, many of these companies have sought to reduce inventories at assembly plants from a five-day-or-more supply to one day's worth of stock on hand.

Such fine-tuned inventory control is difficult to accomplish, and manufacturers are increasingly relying on air-freight deliveries to prevent short-ages of heavy parts.

The slightest glitch in the production process is

New Indications Of a Slowdown Reported in U.S.

WASHINGTON -- Production

at U.S. factories, mines and utilities 15th consecutive monthly rise. was unchanged in October after declining 0.5 percent in September, the Federal Reserve Board said

In a separate report, the Commerce Department said business inventories rose 0.6 percent in September after a 0.9-percent rise in August, while sales slipped for the third straight month.

The two reports, taken with a report Wednesday that consumer spending declined in October, were viewed as further signs that the pace of U.S. economic growth had slowed dramatically. The economy grew at an adjust-ed annual rate of 2.7 percent in the third quarter, compared with a rate of more than 8 percent in the first in the report on industrial production, the Federal Reserve Board said the output index, base 1967, stood at 165.2 in October, 6.6 percent above the year-earlier level.

The September production decline had broken a string of 21 consecutive monthly advances and was the first decline since November 1982, the low point of the last

port said that inventories rose to $559.8 billion in September, the

It also said sales dropped in Sep-tember to $408.9 billion, 0.5 percent less than the August level. Sales were down 0.1 percent in August after a 0.7-percent decline in July. It was the first time since mid-1982 that sales had posted three consecutive monthly declines.

The latest inventory and sales reports followed the report Wednesday that retail sales de-clined 0.1 percent in October, the third decline in four months. "Consumer spending has not yet rebounded and therefore the economy has not yet rebounded," Allen Sinai, chief economist at Shearson Lehman/American Express Inc., said Wednesday. Retail sales dropped in July and August before rising in September. But the Commerce Department revised the September figure Wednesday to show a 1.2-percent increase, less than the 1.6-percent gain originally reported. Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige predicted that consumer spending would pick up through the end of the year.

"Gains in auto sales, rising employment and high levels of consumer confidence indicate that sales growth will resume," he said in a statement. "After a flat third quarter, consumption spending should contribute moderately to fourth-quarter growth." Two of the major U.S. automakers have announced rising sales for the first 10 days of November, but the declining sales of the third, General Motors Corp., put average sales for the three at 4.7 percent below the year-earlier level.

The three major automakers sold 188,775 cars in the 10-day period, down from 198,126 a year earlier. Ford Motor Co. said its sales rose 8.3 percent, and Chrysler Corp. posted an 18.4-percent gain. But General Motors Corp.'s sales fell 14.3 percent.

Disney Plans to Show A Loss of $64 Million

By Robert J. Colc New York Times Service NEW YORK - Walt Disney Productions, operating under new management for less than two months, says it is taking a $166million write-off for the fourth quarter and will therefore show a loss for the period of $64 million.

The company earned $24.5 million in the fourth quarter a year ago. Some sort of write-off - although not quite as drastic - had long been expected by Wall Street's Disney watchers.

The announcement came on Wednesday shortly after the 4 P.M.

Peugeot Seeking $223 Million in Government Aid

PARIS — Peugeot SA has made a request to the French government's Industrial Modernization Fund for 2 billion francs ($222.8 million) in lowinterest loans to help with the development of a new Citroen economy car, a Peugeot spokes-

The loans, which carry an interest rate of 9.25 percent, would be used to equip the Aulnay-sous-Bois car plant near Paris to make the new model.

The fund, which was created last year, has not yet responded to the Peugeot request, the spokesman said. The fund loaned Peugeot about 700 million francs this year to modernize its Talbot subsidiary's Poissy plant to enable it to produce a replacement for its Horizon model.

A spokesman for stateowned Renault, which received 750 million francs from the fund in 1984, said his company remains interested in the possi bility of further subsidized loans from the fund. He added that it is too early to talk about a specific request for 1985.

close of trading on the New York Stock Exchange. Disney closed Wednesday at $58.375, up 62.5

cents, in light trading. Martin Romm, who follows Disney for First Boston Corp., said the write-off represented "a final break with the past and the practices of prior management" in a statement announcing results for the quarter ended Sept. 30 and the full year, Disney said the loss resulted from "management's decision to account for certain unusual charges" in the quarter. It strong recovery to continue said $112 million represented write-downs to "expected net realizable values" for films and television properties in release, production and development.

A sum of $40 million, it said, was for the abandonment of projects that had been considered for Disneyland or Walt Disney World. The remaining charges, Disney said, represented reserves for corporate expenses and other matters.

Disney's new top executives, Michael D. Eisner, chairman, and Frank Wells, president, said they had concluded "that efforts must immediately focus on the rejuvenation of our motion picture and television business, the roots of success of Walt Disney Productions,"

Expansion of Disney's theme parks in California and Florida would continue, they said, but at "pre-Epcot Center levels." Epcot was opened two years ago in Flori-da at a cost of $1.2 billion.

If not for the write-off and a change in accounting for invest-ment tax credits to the flowthrough method. Disney said, net income for the quarter would have fallen 9.8 percent, to $22.1 million, or 65 cents a share, from $24.5 million, or 70 cents a share, in the final quarter of 1983. Revenues rose 27.6 percent in the period, to $463.2 million, from $363 million.

Net income for the fiscal year, Disney said, rose 4.9 percent, to $97.8 million, or $2.73 a share, from $93.2 million, or $2.70 a share. Revenues reached a new high of $1.66 billion, up 26.7 percent from $1,31 billion a year earli-

W. German Electrical Unit Is Optimistic

By Warren Getler International Herald Tribune

FRANKFURT - The West German electrical industry expects to show a 10-percent increase in sales this year, to 135 billion Dentsche marks ($46.2 billion), after recording a 9.4-percent rise in the first three quarters, the ZVEI industrial association said Thursday.

Rudolf Scheid, ZVEI's president, said he expects the industry's through 1985, at a slightly slower 8percent growth rate. That would bring sales to 146 billion DM. Mr. Scheid said earnings as a percent of total sales are expected to improve this year to 2 percent. from last year's 1 to 1.2 percent. He said an increase in capacity use, to 83 percent in the third quarter from 79 percent a year earlier, would help this.

The industry association said employment is expected to increase surance unit, most of which was to cial-services company undergoing by 20,000 this year and as much as comply with a ruling by the Calian additional 28,000 in 1985. The fornia Insurance Department. sector now employs about 930,000 Production for the first nine months was up a real 7.9 percent, and is expected to limish the year up 7 percent, Mr. Scheid said. He estimated a 5-percent to 6-percent increase for 1985.

Mr. Scheid said that production losses related to the May-June metalworkers' strike had been largely recovered. He noted that orders surged 28 percent in July, 14.5 percent in August and 9.9 percent in September from year-earlier levels.

Exports accounted for 45 per- lion Australian dollars ($45 mil- workers returned, bringing the to-cent of production in the first three lion) from 52.7 million dollars for tal there to 1,800. About 100 more quarters, jumping by 17 percent to its finance units, Finance Corp. of workers reported back at Cowley. 58 billion DM.

The industry clearly has been buoyed by the strong dollar. Sales to the United States jumped 52 percent to 3.5 billion DM in the first three quarters. The United States is now the third-largest buyer of West German electrical goods, after France and Britain. Mr. Scheid also pointed to a "technological upturn" in the incompany's founder. He has made some radical changes since he was cent interest in Rousselot. The To Purchase Texize named chairman in 1979. He broke transaction, estimated to be worth Emery's tradition of being a nearly debt-free company that forwarded freight on the larger airlines rather than operate its own fleet. Under his leadership, Emery cut its divi-dend, borrowed $130 million, purchased 24 Boeing 727s and, in 1981, built its Dayton sorting center.

"We had to change to survive," Mr. Emery said at the company's headquarters here. "And now is a fortuitous time for Emery."

The company said third-quarter net income increased 21.8 percent, to $9.5 million, or 51 cents a share, from $7,8 million, or 45 cents a share. Revenues advanced 14 percent, to $204.2 million. For the first nine months, the company's net income increased 34.3 percent to $23.9 million, or $1.28 a share, from $17.8 million, or $1.05 a share. Revenues increased 22 percent, to $596.8 million. Emery's stock, which traded as low as $7 a share in 1982, rose to a high of $26.625 in December. It has since fallen to close Monday at $18, down 12.5 cents, in trading on the

New York Stock Exchange. Parcels weighing more than 70 pounds (31.7 kilograms) are the biggest part of the company's domestic air freight business, contributing almost double the revenue of the lighter parcels. A 99-pound box shipped overnight from New York to Los Angeles, for example, would be billed at $126.25, the company said, compared to $14 for a two-pound parcel.

Mr. Emery said General Electric and General Motors, each with monthly bills exceeding $2 million. are among its largest customers.
But Emery seems certain to face mounting competition.

Just this year, Federal Express, which had limited parcels to 70 pounds, raised its ceiling to 150 pounds.

The United Parcel Service, the huge, privately held carrier that en-tered the overnight air freight business in 1982, has raised its maximum weight to 70 pounds from 50. Emery, which boasts it will take anything - pianos, machine tools, computers, once a miniature submarine — imposes no upper limit.

An Intimate Life

IT all began with my dog, Emma, a beautiful combination Irish setter and golden retriever, with an alternately wild and loving disposition ... " In 1975 Candace Falk, at that time a doctoral candidate in political theory, dropped by to visit a friend who worked in a guitar shop in Chicago. When he found out that the dog with her was called "Red Emma Goldman," he recalled having seen some of Emma Goldman's letters in a room at the back of the shop a few years before. It turned out that there was a huge cache of correspondence - hundreds of passionate outpourings, all signed "Mommy," and all addressed to Ben Reitman, the doctor who was Emma's lover from 1908 to 1917.

Falk, who is now editor of the Emma Goldman Papers Project, was initially reluctant to make the letters public, but when it turned out that many other letters of the same kind were available in libraries and archives, she decided to make use of them in writing a book that puts far more emphasis on Goldman's private life than any previous biography. She also drew them to the attention of Alice Wexler, who had already embarked on her own biography of Goldmar

Inevitably both biographers find themselves covering a good deal of the same ground, especially when they describe the high points of Goldman's career as an anarchist firebrand the most powerful orator the movement possessed in America — from the 1890s on-ward. Even so, the two books complement each other quite well. Westler has a surer touch than Falk when it comes to Emma's early life in Eastern Europe and immigrant America, her Jewish background, the family pressures against which she reacted but which also did so much to shape her personality. On the other hand she unaccountably breaks off with Emma's deportation from the United States in 1919, when she still had more than 20 years to live, and it is to Falk that one must turn for the rest of the story - the return to Russia, the bitter disillusionment with Lenin's revolution, the long exile in Western Europe and Canada.

Wexler's general approach is cooler and more detached than Falk's, but she conveys much the same impression of the Reitman affair. Indeed, there is something to be said for a more compressed version than the full-blown one Falk provides. Emma's letters are torrid, theatrical, completely uninhibited; their initial impact is rather startling. But for the uninvolved reader, a little purple passion goes a long way, especially when much of it is couched in a private erotic language - all too easily decoded — about "the treasure box." "Mt. Blanc and Mt. Jura," and so forth.

Emma Goldman in 1934.

The affair was neither the first nor the little Goldman's life — far from it — but it was undoubtedly the one that caused her the rich anguish. Reitman had much to recon him in her eyes. He had an instinctive sample, thy for social outcasts, for instance (before studying medicine he had lived as a hobo), and studying medicine he had uved as a nopol, and without being a convinced anarchist himself he stood by her in public in ways that sometimes called for considerable courage. But as a lover he was a tough proposition — willful, self-centered, childishly crude, frequently unfaithful. The Automobile Club of Monaco will be expelled from the International Antomobile Federation (FIA), Balestre announced, FISA is

FIA's sporting arm. On Thursday, Jean Herly, a member of the Monaco govern-ment's cabinet, blamed Balestre for the impasse that led to Monaco breaking off talks in the dispute. He said the Automobile Club of Monaco would oppose the cancellation of the races the FISA's gen- las and New York grand prix races eral meeting and, if necessary, through the courts.

The dispute centered on the Monaco club's contract with the U.S. television network ABC for rights to televise the grand prix. The club signed a contract with ABC lasting through 1987 without the approval of FIA authorities.

The dispute over the Monte Carto Rally concerned an unprecedented demand by the French Automobile Federation, whose president is also Balestre, for a levy of one million francs ($110,000) for use of French territory.

Monaco's government said Wednesday that it had failed in its efforts to mediate the dispute between the Automobile Club of Monaco and FIA.

The French government also said Wednesday that it had ended off its attempts to settle the dispute, saying that discussions to improve relations between Monaco and FISA had broken down.

If New York drops out, it would be replaced by a race through the streets of Rome at a date to be fixed later, he said.

Balestre would not rule out the possibility of reinstating the grand prix race if Monaco reapplied, but he pointed out that would be impossible if another race formally applied for the May 19 date.

Balestre said FIA, holder of the television rights of all other grand prix races, should replace the Monaco club as signatory of the club's agreement with ABC. He also wanted Monaco to drop three legal suits against FISA.

England's Coach Revels in 8-0 Victory

LONDON - England's coach, Bobby Robson, could hardly con-ceal his delight Thursday after his soccer team crushed Turkey, 8-0, in Istanbul in their World Cup Group

Three qualifying match. "We did everything we had to, it all came good for us," Robson said. It was a terrific performance."

But the pleased reaction to England's victory was tempered with realism. "With respect to the Turks we are doing the job at the moment, the hardest part is yet to come," said Robson, a view shared by evry British newspaper. The Guardian newspaper said.

Baseball Opens Contract Talks

TV Revenues Among Disputes Cited by Owners and Players

By Joseph Durso New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Baseball players and club owners have opened talks on a new labor contract, with both sides expressing hope that they could avoid the hostility that led to a two-month shutdown of the major leagues three years ago.

But both sides also conceded that at least three areas of conflict had been broached at the meeting: player benefits, salary arbitration and changes in the free-agent system. And they offered no assurance that they could reach agreement before the current contract ends on Dec. 31 or before spring training starts in February.

"Neither side could afford to go through a long strike again," said Lee MacPhail, former president of the American League, who re-placed Ray Grebey as chief negoti-ator for the owners this year. "Both these talks in a different way, with a different tone, without the acrimony that contributed to the length of the strike in 1981."

Donald Fehr, acting executive director of the players association. was asked if both sides had been chastened by the strike, and re-

"I hope both sides were chastened. We all recalled the strike in our opening remarks. We didn't dwell on it, but we didn't pretend it hadn't happened. We all expressed a desire to conduct these negotiations fairly, in the proper manner, with a proper tone."

The players and owners met for 90 minutes Wednesday in the office of the Player Relations Com-mittee, which handles labor mat-ters for the 26 clubs. Their mission was to write a new Basic Agreement, or industry code. It usually runs four years, and covers a wide range of terms from minimum pay to travel, pensions, benefits, salary arbitration and the rules of the free-agent system.

The negotiations in 1981 broke down over the issue of compensating teams that lost players as free agents. The players went on strike on June 12, and the big leagues vere shut down for 50 days. Calculating the clubs' contribu-back to 1969, and may now become the most crucial issue in the talks. The clubs now contribute $15.5

"We have an obligation to pro-vide benefits," MacPhail said, "but where it comes from is up to us. The players say we've been giving one-third of the clubs' TV revenue. The clubs don't admit there is any relationship to TV. in the past, both sides have stipulated that they each view the matter differently. Now, there's been a big escalation in broadcast revenue, and the numbers have changed."

David E LeFevre, a New York lawyer, formally withdrew on Wednesday his estimated $41-million offer to buy the Cleveland Indians' baseball team, because of continued litigation involving some of the team's minority stockholders, The Associated Press reported. However, LeFevre said that he "wouldn't rule out another offer" at some point in the future.

The American League team has been for sale since shortly after the death in August 1983 of F.J. O'Neill, who owned about 52 percent of the team.

Expos Opt for Rodgers As Weaver Stays Retired

The Associated Press MONTREAL — Buck Rodgers, a former Milwaukee Brewer manager, has been named manager of the Montreal Expos, filling the last available managerial spot in the major leagues for 1985.

Rodgers, 46, was given a twoyear contract, The Expos' general manager, Murray Cook, said Wednesday. Cook said Rodgers was hired after it became clear that Earl Weaver, the former manager of Baltimore, was not interested.

"I don't care if I'm the first, second or 35th choice," said Rogers, who became the fourth Expos manager in five seasons. "I'm very happy to be here."

PRAGUE (UPI) — The chairman of Czechoslovakia's National Olympic Committee, Antonin Himl, has said the decision to hold the 1988 Summer Games in Seoul was a mistake, but the Soviet bloc will attend. Returning from a meeting of the National Olympic Committees in Mexico City, Himl said Wednesday that the Czechoslovak Olympic team was preparing for the Games, although their venue in the South Korean capital would cause problems.

"According to the Soviet Union and the other Socialist countries, the Baden Baden decision to give the 1988 games to Seoul was a mistake which will bring the Olympic movement many problems in the future,"

The mass-circulation newspaper Yomiuri Shimbun, which owns the country's most popular baseball club, the Yomiuri Giants, said in an editorial Thursday "the Orioles' win-loss record shows that Japanese players' abilities are almost the same as American players, but it still is true that Japanese pro baseball is behind the U.S. in terms of power and speed of its players."

Lisbon Marathon Comes Up Short

LISBON (AP) - The Lisbon marathon race in which Cidalio Caetano of Portugal on Nov.3 equalled the world record was more than a half mile short of the regulation distance, officials said Thursday. The fast times had raised questions about the length of the course.

Lisbon Athletics Association Secretary-general Joao Teixeira de Sousa said an investigation had revealed the race to be 1,028 yards (942 meters) short of the official distance of 26 miles, 385 yards. Caetano won the race in 2 hours, 8 minutes and 5 seconds, equalling the world record set by Steve Jones of Wales in the Chicago marathon on Oct. 21.

The Lisbon Athletics Sssociation said that errors in the organizing of the race had led to the shortening of the course. The association ruled that the race would not be recognized as a marathon, but it said the classifications and prizes would stand for the shorter distance.

Thoughts From a Puddle

By Russell Baker

NEW YORK — At Penn Sta-tion in New York I sat in a puddle of beer. I had not intended to sit in a puddle of beer. My family will swear to that. I can imagine any of "Puddle of beer? Nyah, the old man didn't say nothing about going to Penn Station to sit in a puddle of beer. He said he was just going there to catch the train to Washing-

Furthermore, I do not like to sit in puddles of beer and had never done so before, since I had always suspected that sitting in a puddle of beer would make the seat of my best slacks give off an odor that would attract bar rags.

Imagine my amazement then to discover myself in the Penn Station waiting room sitting in a puddle of beer. This particular puddle of beer had been poured into the contour depression of a waiting-room chair seat, by whom or why I could only guess. Nor did I think of guessing

My first thoughts came in the following sequence: 1. I am sitting in a puddle of

2. This being New York, the nature of the liquid puddle now penetrating my best slacks and soaking my underwear could be truly unspeakable.

3. Now I understand why, although every other seat around me is occupied and hundreds of other people are standing around me desperate with fatigue, this seat alone was not taken until I sat down.

4. The fumes rising around me are very similar to fumes that used to fill the barracks early on Sunday mornings in 1943, which means that the puddle I'm sitting in is almost certainly a puddle of beer.

5. This being New York, and this being the Penn Station waiting room. I ought to be thankful that the puddle is merely a puddle of

All these thoughts were thought in a fraction of an instant, but as my brain cooled I dealt swiftly and calmly with the main policy problem confronting a man who has just sat in a puddle of beer in the presence of a large audience.

Of course not. The hundreds of people pointedly not looking at me had doubtless watched intently (without looking) while I sat in the puddle of beer. Obviously, every one of them knew the puddle of beer was there, and any one could have spoken out as one human might speak to another.

"Wouldn't sit there if I was you. mister, 'cause there's a puddle of beer there, y'see."

Not one had said that, yet surely, even in New York, not all could be poor dumb wordless beasts utterly indifferent to a fellow traveler wearing his best slacks. Only two possibilities could explain their apparent brutality:

One, the person who had poured the puddle of beer was heavily armed and had announced that anyone who tried to prevent me from sitting in it would be instantly

Two, the puddle-of-beer pourer was an entertainer hired by the railroad to amuse passengers waiting for trains that were far behind schedule. This clown, after pouring the puddle of beer, had promised everybody a big laugh when, discovering that my best slacks had been rumed. I leaned up screaming

It is a terrible confession to make, but I hated my fellow pas-sengers then, loathed them for their eagerness to laugh at my ruined pants, detested them for despicable sheep who hadn't enough character even to warn a good, decent, kind man against sitting in a puddle of beer. I would never, never satisfy their craving for a good laugh. And so I sat there, as though I sat in puddles of beer three times every day and all night long while watching television.

The expression on my face, I hope, said, "Ah, how nice to find a good comfy puddle of beer in the depot waiting room."

When osmosis had lifted the puddle of beer through my nether garments and up into the woof and warp of my best jacket. I rose with the calmly dripping dignity befit-ting a traveler to Washington. And when I arrived there the cab driver said, "Ah, you're from New York, I

Testimony: Life and Times of the King of Rock

By Richard Harrington

7ASHINGTON - In this Watery, there is only one true King of Rock 'n' Roll and his name is Little Richard, ne Richard Penniman, also known as the Bronze Liberace, the Georgia Peach and, as he himself sometimes declaimed, the Queen of Rock 'n' Roll as well.

Just now, the King, at 51, is ordering steak and eggs from room service, with instruction to burn the steak and send up bottles of ketchup, steak sauce and tabas-

"It's for Little Richard, thank you." He says his own name quite reverently.

Yes, Little Richard, whose outrageousness and frenetic energy snagged a nation's attention startsnagged a nation's arienton's start-ing back in 1955 with "Tutti Frutti," "Lucille," "Rip It Up," "Long Tall Sally," "Good Golly Miss Molly" and "Slippin' and Little Richard, whose progeny ranged from James Brown and Oris Redding to Paul McCartney and Mick Jagger.

He is distinguished, this man.

In his striped three-piece suit, he looks much more the preacher that he is now than the wild-eyed raver he was back then. The foothigh, pound-of-oil pompadour is gone. The mascara has run off with the last of the sweat. The Day-Glo mirrored costumes, now too small at the waist, are packed away, at least those that survived the old days when rock 'n' roll fans would swarm at the foot of the stage for the shreds of his discarded outlits.

What's left after a quarter of a century is the neon grin, the nearly painful smile that sometimes flashes irony. It's less devilish now, because Little Richard is, after all, a man of God, an evangelist, a preacher against his own

But he's still Little Richard. It doesn't matter that Little Richard is an evangelist preaching against the sins of rock 'n' roll, because what we are talking about now is history. Though the reverend in him wants to change your future, the rocker in him is not about to let anybody mess with

He's especially happy because now there's a book to tell his side of the story: "The Life and Times of Little Richard - The Quasar of Rock," woven by British deejay Charles White from the praise of rock luminaries, the insights of compatriots and family and a slew of ribald anecdotes from the old Quasar himself.

"It's nice to see all the testimony," Little Richard says, not at all

"My place was denied before. I have read many rock books where my place was not right, they never put it in the right perspective. A lot of black people haven't been talked about right in those books. I'm glad to be documented in a fair way where I can read it before

I go."
He doesn't mind being repentant, but don't expect him to be apologetic. "I don't apologize for anything. The things that I've done, when I did it, I loved it. If I had my life to live over again, there are some things I've done that I'm not too proud of."

He mulls it over a moment then retraces his thought. "I wouldn't try some things again, I may not make it through it. But what I did, I did. It was honest and it was real and I loved every minute of it. I enjoyed it. Now, I couldn't tell nobody else to do it, reason I wrote the book, so people could profit by it. It tells about sex, drugs, rock and religion. "This is my life story and I ain't ever read a book like it in my life." One of 12 children born to a Macon, Georgia, family, Richard Penniman came into this world with an oversized head, uneven legs, one eye bigger than the other and, apparently, more spunk and rebelliousness than his 11 siblings owned him as "half a son."

you understand me. That's the put together. Some of his growing-up stories are utterly bizarre and it's little wonder that his father, a part-time bootlegger who was shot to death in 1952, dis-

The dichotomy of sin and sal-vation was sketched early on by a grandfather and two uncles who were preachers. Little Richard's first musical experience came in the church, where he played piano and sang gospel. By the time he ran off to join a traveling medicine show and started his career in Georgia roadhouses, his piano playing had acquired a decidedly haphazard edge. Little Richard's exaggerated pompadour and early style were adapted from Billy Wright, an overlooked Atlanta vet who had scored a number of R & B hits between 1949 and 1951. Still, Little Richard's initial recordings were undistinguished variations on jump and hard blues in the manner of Ray Charles and B. B. King. At the end of a recording session in 1955, there was a little extra studio time to fool around.

The rest is history.

The "Tutti Frutti" that launched his career, Little Richard points out, is not even the same one he recorded at the tail end of that session. That version had lyrics that were far too vivid for the '50s. But Richard remembers. It began:
"A wopbopaloobop alopbam-boom, tutti frutti, good booty..." And so on into a litany of seamy double entendres.

For a while after "Tutti Frutti," the hits kept coming, and 18 mil-lion singles were sold. But in 1958 Little Richard suddenly quit, entering an Alabama Bible school, studying to be a preacher.

Then in 1964, he went to England for what he thought was a gospel tour. "If I had had known I was going to sing rock 'n' roll, would've took a band and wouldn't have went at that time,' he says. "We got there and Sam Cooke's name [was] up there on the marquee with mine. He tore the house up, and so my ego got into this thing. I couldn't stand to see Sam Cooke tear that house up and take the show from me. went out there and started singing 'Lucille' and there was a standing ovation. I was relieved that Sam Cooke couldn't take the show but I was really despondent inside be-cause it went against what I felt.

after that." The descent into drug addiction, coupled with a no-holdsbarred attitude toward sex and

That's when I started into drugs, gated to the oldies pile, made the 60s and early 70s a testing time for Little Richard. Though he remained a vibrant performer, the music seemed dated, nostalgic. It didn't seem to matter that the Beatles, the Stones, Jimi Hendrix and a whole school of performers before and after them owed Little

Richard an enormous debt for

They didn't want me to be in the white guys' way," he says tes-tily, not naming them. "I felt I was pushed into a rhythm and blues corner to keep out of the rockers' way, because that's where the money is. When Tutti Frutti' came out, Elvis was immediately put on me, dancing and singing my songs on television. They needed a rock star to block me out of white homes because I was a hero to white kids. The white kids would have Pat Boone up on the dresser and me in the drawer 'cause they liked my version better, but the families didn't want me because of the image that I was projecting. Later on, I looked back and I thanked Elvis and Pat for doing my stuff befor me into the pop market."

Asked if he's still an active homosexual, Little Richard does some rare waffling. "Me, myself, personally, I'm 51 years old. I'll be 52 Dec. 5. At this age and stage, I'll be looking like a fool going out on the streets looking for somebody like I used to do years ago. I wouldn't dare do that. I'm not against that, but I don't go around anymore. I wished I had a wife and kids at this stage of my life, but fate didn't work that cause they really opened the door way for me." Fate has brought him a life in which "I don't get high no more. I don't do cocaine no more. My life now is dedicated strictly to my Bible-studying and doing good for others.

And Little Richard mentions a dream - not an immodest one, considering his outsize achievements in the past. He wants to see a home for entertainers "so that when they get old and sick and afflicted, they have a place to stay and won't have to pay and when they die, they can be buried with dignity and with class."

That's my desire and my de-
